The reason assigned for this selfish and illiberal conduct on the part of the Companies, is the impossibility of properly accommodating all the travel which occurs at those particular hours. This is precisely the reason which justifies the construction of a new Railroad. Let them divide their business—which is heavier than they can properly perform,—with new competitors, and then the public will stand some chance of being provided for.

TRANSPARENT VOTING.—Among the measures now before our Legislature which ought not to be over-slaughed is a resolution in favor of the adoption of glass ballot-boxes at all the elections in this State. It has often been asserted, and, in many instances with truth, as we believe, that elections have been carried in this City by means of false ballot-boxes and ballot-stuffers. The glass ballot-boxes would effectually prevent any such rascality, and, as there can be no honest objection to the use of such means for insuring the purity of elections, we do not see why the law authorizing their adoption should not pass without opposition.

...Committee of Public Safety—New-York Militia—Passage of Mr. Brooks' Sunday Church Bill—Action of Boards of Health—The Union-Defence Committee—Appointment of Public Lecturers—Quarantine, &c.

Correspondence of the New-York Daily Times.

ALBANY, Tuesday, April 7, 1857.

The New-York Charter bill was reported to the Senate complete this morning, and ordered to a third reading. It has been amended, so that in some respects it is anything but the reform measure that passed the House.

The Know-Nothing members of the Committee on Cities and Villages, Messrs. BROOKS and PETTIT, united in recommitting the sections as to restore to the Street Department the patronage for the retention of which there was made such a concentrated effort, while the bill was on its passage through the Assembly. They continue in the Street Department the same work that it now has—and of course thereby perpetuate the confusion and incongruity of the present system. Of course Messrs. BROOKS and PETTIT will justify this defeat of a great reform, if their amendments shall be adhered to and adopted, upon the plea that they were bound to sustain their party friends, but they will find it difficult to obtain an indictment from their constituents, of a continuance of such official corruption as has existed since the adoption of the Charter under which the present departments are organized.

Another amendment provides for dividing the City into seventeen Aldermanic districts—the present wards being all cut through and through. I cannot think that an amendment which must defeat the present boundary lines, can possibly receive the concurrence of the Legislature.

The Police Bill is now before the Committee on Cities and Villages of the Senate. The Committee meet this evening, for the purpose of considering the bill, and will probably report it to the Senate to-morrow morning, and then in all probability it will be carried through the "grinding committee," and returned back to be reported complete. It is more than probable that an amendment will be made, striking out the Commissioners from Westchester and Richmond, and increasing the pay to $2,500 a year. There will also be some slight amendments fixing the relative contributions to the fund for the payment of the expenses of department, to be made by New-York and Brooklyn.

The bill to provide for laying out the Central Park is also before the Senate Committee on Cities and Villages. It will, in all probability, be reported exactly as it came from the Assembly, and pass without objection.

The Supervisors' bill is still before the Sub-Committee of the Whole of the Assembly. It provides that the Board of Supervisors shall be composed of twelve persons, to be elected on a general ticket, only six names to be voted on each ticket. The object is to divide the Supervisors from the Aldermen—a combination which has heretofore caused much trouble, and which was always a fruitful source of corruption. The Mayor and Recorder are no longer members of the Board as at present.

The City Hall bill is also in the Assembly Sub-Committee of the Whole. It has no opposition, and will no doubt be moved rapidly forward as soon as it can be reached.

The Assessment bill is ordered to a third reading in the Assembly. It abolishes the present ward assessors, and creates twelve deputies to the three Tax Commissioners now in office. It gives these deputies the same powers now exercised by the ward assessors, and the assessors of the street department. The object of the bill is to equalize the scale of taxation, and to centre in one office the imposition of all taxes.

These are "the New-York bills," as they are popularly known hereabouts. They are all parts of one whole, and need to be carried together, if the full measure of reform of the City Government is to be accomplished. I think they will all become enactments before the Legislature adjourns, and that, when they shall be put in force, their beneficial effect will be apparent to all.

The bill to fix the exterior water line of the Harbor of New-York is before the Committee of the whole Senate. Its enactment is severely contested, and I doubt if it passes unless the mercantile strength of the City is actively and strongly manifested in its favor.

The Senate was in session from 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon until 2½ o'clock this morning, discussing the bill to amend the act of 1814, incorporating Trinity Church. Senator SICKLES spoke for six hours in opposition to the bill, and it is said maintained the interest and force of his remarks to the end. I was not present myself, but a gentleman who dropped in when Mr. SICKLES had been speaking two hours, told me that he found it impossible to withdraw while he continued.

When Mr. SICKLES had concluded, Senator BROOKS briefly replied. That gentleman had evidently prepared himself for an elaborate discussion of the questions involved, but the late period at which he obtained the floor seemed to impress him with the necessity of so condensing his remarks as to occupy the least time possible.

It was after midnight when the vote was reached and the bill reported to the Senate. The adoption of the motion to order the bill engrossed for a third reading was hotly contested. Several motions to postpone, to amend, to adjourn and to recommit, were successively voted down, and the bill finally ordered to a third reading, by a vote of 20 to 11, and then immediately read a third time and passed—ayes 19, noes 12, as follows:

AYES—Messrs. Brooks, Cuyler, Darling, Ferdon, Hall, Hartcort, Hotchkiss, Kelly, Lee, Noxon, Paterson, Pixley, Ramsey, Richardson, Elder, A. M. Smith, C. P. Smith, Spencer, Upham—19.

NOES—Messrs. Bellinger, Bradford, Briggs, Huntington, Madden, Nichols, J. A. Smith, Sickles, Sweet, Towne, Fisher, Wadsworth—12.

The bill passed is the substitute offered by Mr. BROOKS in place of the bill reported by the Select Committee.

I think the bill is to pass the Assembly, substantially as it has gone through the Senate—and that probably at a very early day.

The House was enlivened by a spicy debate this morning over the bill to prohibit Banks from hoarding the bills of other Banks. The purport of this bill is to put a muzzle on the business of the Metropolitan and American Exchange Banks of your City. The fun between Messrs. LEAVENWORTH and FOOTE were exceedingly sharp, one or two of their jokes, being somewhat broader than are often heard on the floor of the Assembly Chamber, were received with loud outbursts of laughter. Before any decision was had, the speaker dissolved the Committee—the hour fixed for the election of a Regent of the University and Superintendent of Public Instruction having been reached.

The House proceeded to nominate a candidate for Regent, the result of the roll-call being that there were found 78 votes for Rev. ISAAC PARKS, of Oneida; 34 for SAMUEL E. JOHNSON, of Brooklyn; 4 for JAMES W. BEEKMAN, and 1 for GEORGE DAWSON, of Albany. The Senate had cast 17 votes for Mr. PARKS; 8 for HIRAM KETCHUM, 4 for Mr. JOHNSON, and 1 for LEONARD LINCKLAEN. The two Houses having assembled "finally," a comparison of votes was had, and it being ascertained that they were agreed, the Lieutenant-Governor announced that fact to the gentlemen present, and declared Mr. PARKS duly elected.

Then the Senate and Assembly took a ballot for Superintendent of Public Instruction. Senator UPHAM and Assemblyman HARPENDING were appointed Tellers, who reported the following result: H. H. VAN DYCK, Republican, 95; SHERMAN CROSWELL, Democrat, 38; NEHEMIAH P. STANTON, Know-Nothing, 2. So Mr. VAN DYCK was declared elected Superintendent, and then the Lieutenant-Governor, and the Sergeant-at-Arms, and the Senators, and the Clerks and Deputies, and the Page boys went up stairs, and the Speaker and his Clerk, and his members of Assembly went back to the consideration of the Country Bank-Note Redemption bill, which was further discussed and then ordered to a third reading by a vote of—Ayes, 59; Noes, 13.

The Commissioners to select a site for a new Quarantine station reported this morning to the Governor, Lieutenant, and Comptroller, that they have chosen a piece of ground on the south side of Staten Island, near Legoine's Point. They report in favor of moving the Hospital establishments to the new locality, where all vessels infected with pestilential diseases are to be sent, and where all patients are to be detained. The present boarding-station is to be retained. The anchorage during the Summer to be in Lower Bay, and in Winter at the present station. The report has received the sanction of the Health Officer, and, as I understand, the proposed change is acceptable to the Presidents at the present quarantine station, and to the commercial interests of the City.

It is understood that the Commissioners will at once proceed to erect the structures necessary to enable the Health Officers to make the changes contemplated.

It is more than probable that NOAH DAVIS, Jr., ...place of Judge MULLER, ...and from the universality with which he ... Governor, ALEXANDER L. JORDAN is mentioned. I presume the gentleman will be the successor of Judge WAYNE.

I see the waters moving. The waters wherein are buried now the embryo Harbor Masters for the port of New-York. From the intensity of the bubbling, I think they will float to the surface on Friday next.

NEW-YORK LEGISLATURE.

SENATE....ALBANY, Tuesday, April 7.

The Senate was in Session until nearly 2 o'clock this morning on the Trinity Church bill.

Mr. BROOKS substitute was passed through the Committee of the Whole and ordered to a third reading.

When the Committee rose Mr. SPENCER moved that the bill be read a third time.

This was warmly opposed by Messrs. SICKLES and MADDEN, and supported by Messrs. RICHARDSON, LEE and others.

Mr. MADDEN moved to postpone the subject indefinitely.

Motion lost.

The bill was then passed by ayes, 19; nays, 12.

The bill provides that half the wardens and vestrymen shall be chosen by Trinity Church, and half by delegates elected by the vestry of the several Protestant Episcopal Churches, other than those belonging to Trinity Church; also provides that a sum shall be set off for the sum of Trinity Church, and partitions the remainder of the funds; also, provides that the wardens and vestry of the church elected shall choose the Rector, ministers, &c.

Mr. BROOKS presented a petition for confirming the exterior line of the Harbor Commissioners.

Mr. BROOKE reported complete, with some amendments, the New-York Charter bill; also the bill to widen Broadway, New-York, between Fifty-seventh and Fifty-ninth streets.

Mr. C. P. SMITH reported favorably on the bill regulating markets, and the tare on packages.

The bill for the improvement of the Hudson River was made the special order for 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The joint resolutions introduced in the Assembly by Mr. SLUYTER, respecting the removal of the obstructions to the navigation of the Harlem River, were passed.

The vote for Regent of the University was as follows: PARKS 17, HIRAM KETCHUM 8, JOHNSON 4, LEONARD LINKHAM 1.

Mr. RICHARDSON, from the majority of the Finance Committee, reported adversely to the purchase of an Executive mansion, on the ground that there were no funds in the Treasury.

Mr. SPENCER dissented from the report.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Senate debated the Schuyler County Bill with a prospect of a late session. No nominations of importance went into the Senate to-day.

ASSEMBLY....ALBANY, Tuesday, Feb. 7.

The Bank Superintendent sent in a report as to the manner in which the expenses of the Department are assessed.

Mr. LEWIS was placed on the Bank and Insurance Committee, in place of Mr. BABCOCK, deceased.

The clause in the bill providing for the completion of a correct atlas and map of the State, was stricken out.

On motion of Mr. ADAMS, the bill restricting City Banks from holding back the notes of country Banks, for the purpose of forcing redemption, was taken up.

Mr. SPENCER offered a substitute for the bill, providing that country Banks shall only be required to redeem at their own counters.

Before the question was taken the special order was arrived at, and the House proceeded to nominate a Regent for the University, in place of ROBERT KELLY, deceased, with the following result:

ISAAC PARKS, of Oneida	73
SAMUEL E. JOHNSON, of Kings	34
JAMES W. BEEKMAN, of New-York	4
GEORGE DAWSON, of Albany	1

Messrs. SPENCER and BRADFORD here appeared as a Committee from the Senate, and informed the House that the Senate had agreed on a nomination for Regent, and were prepared to meet the Assembly and compare the same.

Messrs. POMEROY and SLUYTER were then appointed on the part of the House to convey a similar message to the Senate, and inform the Senate that the House was prepared to go into a joint ballot for the appointment of a Superintendent of Public Instruction.

The members of the Senate appeared and on their taking seats the journals of both Houses were read, and the nominations agreeing, the President of the Senate declared Mr. ISAAC PARKE duly elected Regent of the University.

HENRY H. VAN DYKE, of Montgomery	95
SHERMAN CROSWELL, of Albany	38
N. P. STRATTON, of Niagara	9
S. J. WILKIN	2

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The House took up the bill making appropriations for the enlargement and completion of the Canals of the State. The bill appropriates for the Erie Canal $2,320,492 12; for the Oswego Canal, $444,904 12; for the Cayuga and Seneca Canal, $212,119 42; for the Black River Canal, $130,861 06; and for the Champlain Canal, $141,481 04.

After a warm political discussion between Messrs. FLOYD JONES, and WOODRUFF, on the Democratic and Whig financial policy for the last twenty years, the Committee rose before taking any question.

A motion made to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the further consideration of the bill, and ordering it to a third reading, was lost by Yeas 34, Nays 47.

Personal.

Hon. HENRY W. HILLIARD, of Alabama, does not appear to have retired from public life, as was reported, but in a recent letter avows his willingness to stand as a candidate for reelection to Congress, provided he is not required to come into conflict with Mr. BUCHANAN'S Administration, for which he entertains a profound respect.

Mr. DALTON, owner of one of the horses which were lately punished in a hundred mile race, writes to the Springfield Republican to say that the animals were not at all injured, nor did he intend to be cruel, as the meddling newspapere insist he was. Besides, "the bet was paid promptly, and without a word of objection."

At the annual meeting of THEODORE PARKER'S Society in Boston, held last week, it was voted to increase the yearly salary of the pastor, Rev. THEODORE PARKER, from $1,600 to $2,500. It was also voted to give Mr. PARKER a vacation of six months, on account of his health, and to supply the pulpit during that time.

The Massachusetts House has granted to ELIHU BURRITT the use of its Hall, for the delivery of a discourse touching "A Plan of Brotherly Copartnership of the North and South for the Peaceful Extinction of Slavery."

A live Professor of Harvard College (name not mentioned publicly) was nearly "garroted" one fine night last week. He shook himself clear, showed his assailant a clean pair of heels, and left his cap behind. So the story goes.

Col. SAM. MEDARY, Governor of Minnesota, has accepted an invitation to meet Col. SCHOULER, STANLEY MATTHEWS, N. H. SWAYNE, TOM FORD, and other friends, political and personal, "at the festive board," before leaving for high latitudes.

Two notable "free lovers," Dr. THOMAS L. NICHOLS, and his wife, MARY S. GOVE NICHOLS, the latter the author of Mary Lyndon, have become converts to Catholicism in Cincinnati. The story of their conversion is told as follows, by the Catholic Telegraph and Chronicle:—

"Dr. T. L. NICHOLS, and MARY GOVE NICHOLS, of 'free love' notoriety, were baptized on last Sunday afternoon. In St. Xavier Church, Sycamore-street, Cincinnati, by Rev. FATHER OAKLEY, Rector of the College, having been duly converted to the Catholic faith. With them were also baptized a daughter of Mrs. NICHOLS by a former husband, and a Miss HOPKINS, of the free-love Yellow Springs institution."

From the following paragraph in the Telegraph, it appears that the spirits were the instruments that effected these wonderful conversions.

"It is not a little remarkable that on either side of the Atlantic, at the same time, the spirits have advised their mediums, Mr. HUME at Paris, and Dr. NICHOLS and family here, to seek salvation through the church. If they are good spirits, we can easily see the motives of this advice; if bad ones, they are like those who went out of the possessed, as we read in the Gospel, confessing Jesue Christ."

Dr. NICHOLS, in the name of himself and wife, has written a retraction of his free love and infidel teachings, in a letter to Archbishop PURCELL, which is printed. The pith of the document is in the paragraph following:

"In the infinite mercy of Almighty God we have ...miraculous interposition of the Holy Spirit, and by the blessed teachings of St. Ignatius Loyola and St. Francis Xavier, to the renunciation of infidelity, and to the humble acceptance of the faith and guidance of the Church. In deep humility and contrition we submit ourselves to her divine order, we accept what she teaches, and we repudiate and condemn what she condemns. Whatever, in our writings and teachings, and in our lives, has been contrary to the doctrines, morality, and discipline of the holy Catholic Church, we wish to retract and repudiate, and, were it possible, to atone for."

Obituary.

The late Senator PENROSE, of Pennsylvania, says the North American, was eminent in the politics of Pennsylvania. Years ago he served an extended tour of duty in the State Senate, of which body he was Speaker during the exciting period of what is popularly known as the Buckshot War. Having been active in securing the nomination, and promoting the election of Gen. HARRISON to the Presidency, on the inauguration of his Administration he was appointed Solicitor of the Treasury, an office which he held until the expiration of Mr. TYLER'S term. When Mr. MEREDITH took charge of the Treasury Department, as a member of Gen. TAYLOR'S Cabinet, he selected Mr. PENROSE as the Assistant Secretary. During the second year of consolidation in Philadelphia, Mr. PENROSE served as a member of the Common Council, and at the time of his decease, was one of the Senatorial Representatives of the city in the State Legislature.

The London Literary Gazette states that intelligence has been received at the Foreign Office, from the British Consul at Tripoli, of the assassination of Dr. VOGEL, the African explorer. The letter received at Tripoli is from Corporal MAGUIRE, one of the sappers sent out with Dr. VOGEL, and is written from Kuka. Dr. VOGEL had departed from that place comparatively alone, on a most perilous journey eastward, with the view of reaching the Nile. He is said to have advanced through Birgirmi into Wadily, and to have been there murdered. The Sheik of Bornu has promised to forward particulars to the Consul at Tripoli, as soon as they have been ascertained.

Mr. W. H. REEVES, who came here from England, some ten years ago, with Mme. ANNA BISHOP, and has since been attached to several English Opera companies, died on Friday, of dropsy on the brain. Mr. REEVES leaves a wife and three children in very destitute circumstances. He was a brother of the great tenor SIMS REEVES.

Meeting of Publishers.

The Publishers and Booksellers in attendance on the Spring Trade sales, now being held in this City, had a meeting last night at the saleeroom of LEAVITT, DELISSER & Co., Broadway, the chair being occupied by Mr. WM. APPLETON. The transactions were entirely of a business nature, uninteresting to parties outside the trade. The subject of International Copyright was to have been taken up, but owing to the lateness of the hour was deferred till another occasion. The following resolution was offered by Mr. DERBY, and carried:

Whereas, Since our last semi-annual gathering it has again become our duty to bow to the dispensations of Divine Providence, in the removal by death of three of our number, who for many years have been closely connected with the bookselling and bookbuying trade of this country, and who, in all their business relations with their brethren of the trade won an honorable name for upright dealing, urbanity of manner, and kindness of heart, therefore

Resolved, That in the removal by death of the late BENJAMIN B. MUSSEY, of Boston, NATHAN BANOS, of New-York, and WILLIAM ANDREWS, of ———, we have met with no common loss.

Resolved, That we recur with pleasure to our acquaintance with those gentlemen, both in our business and social relations.

Resolved, That we tender to their relatives our condolence and sympathy in their great affliction, and that a record of the action of this meeting be forwarded to them by the officers.

The Comptroller in a new Character.

A good many have wondered that the Central Park Police have not been paid off ere this, as the Tax bill which recently passed the Legislature provided for the arrears due them. The difficulty seems to have arisen from the number of money orders now held by those who have been supplying the police all along with bread, beans and clothing. Mr. FLAGG sometimes acts as a Court of Equity, and in this case to prevent any future complaints, he on Saturday last notified all holders of orders to present the same to him to-day, when he will sollate and closely scrutinize them. If any Central Park employe has issued such orders for more than the arrearages due, Mr. FLAGG, in justice to all parties, will hold on to the future compensation of such employe for the sole use and benefit of his creditor, until the order is canceled. The Comptroller, therefore, may be called a "stake-holder," but not in so illegal a sense as to require his impeachment.

Balance Docks.

The decision rendered in the Supreme Court on Monday, by Judge Roosevelt, against the New York Balance Dock Company, is viewed with much interest by the mercantile community. This company owns two balance docks at present located near the foot of Pike Slip. The largest of these was constructed about eighteen months ago, and cost some $300,000. It has been stationed at several different points since its completion, and was removed to its present position about a year ago from the foot of Market-street. So immense a dock needs a great depth of water—not less than thirty feet at low tide, and the owners claim that it is impossible to find accommodations for it in slips less valuable for commercial purposes. It cannot be taken further upon the East River side, for there the water is too shallow. By the decision of Judge ROOSEVELT, the two docks must be removed within the next six months, but it is understood that the company will appeal. The largest of the docks measures 325 feet in length, and was used for the coppering of the Collins Steamer Adriatic.

Hon. Neal Dow.

This gentleman sails to-day for Europe, to advocate, by invitation, the Maine Law in England. The following letter was yesterday received from him by PETER SINCLAIR, Esq., of Scotland.

PORTLAND, Sunday, April 5, 1857.

PETER SINCLAIR, Esq.—Dear Sir: I have but one more day at home. To-morrow, at 7 P. M., I take passage at our wharves in a steamer for Boston, whence I sail in the Europa on Wednesday, at 11 A. M.

A parting word with you before I go, as I may not meet you on the other side of the water. I hope the way will be opened for you in this country for very extensive usefulness and honor. Your labors among us were productive of great good, in stirring up our people, and stimulating them to greater activity and zeal.

Measures are already in progress for the formation of Bands of Hope in all our Sabbath-Schools, and there seems to be a general revival among us of the love of God and man, which results in beneficent works.

All my family unite with me heartily in wishes for your health and happiness. Very truly your friend and brother,

NEAL DOW.

☞ The rescue of the man from the sunken brig Crawford, which capsized in our river on Monday, was due to the exertions of Lieut. REYNOLDS and a boat's crew from Capt. FAUNCE'S Revenue-Cutter Washington, which was anchored in Buttermilk Channel, and observed the vessel when she sunk. The man had been nearly an hour in the rigging when he was rescued. The report that he was taken off by a boat from Governor's Island was a mistake.

☞ A laboring man named THOMAS WEST was killed yesterday by the caving in of an embankment of earth at the corner of Twenty-ninth-street and Third avenue.

The Abandoned Schooner Eclipse—Who is Entitled to Salvage?

When our reporters came home from their cruise among the frozen fleet of the Chesapeake last Winter, they told the curious story of the schooner Eclipse, which some of our readers may have forgotten by this time.

The Eclipse was a coaster between Charleston and New-York. Her cargo was cotton, rice, iron safes and turpentine. Vessel and cargo together were valued at $36,000. Knocked about by a terrible storm, her master deemed her utterly unseaworthy when the Samuel Russell fell in with her, 130 miles off Cape Henry on the 20th of January last, and gladly accepted the offer to take him and his seven men off—when the Samuel Russell had given repeated assurances that towing her in was out of the question, and rejected the $5,000 offered for that service. The story, as told in the Winter, was that when the master of the Eclipse abandoned her, the Samuel Russell's captain sent his 3d mate and five men, on board to fetch her in as a prize. This was successfully achieved, but when the Eclipse came struggling in to Hampton Roads where the Russell had got before her in time to be badly beached and frozen up, the third mate and crew who fetched the Eclipse in, declined to surrender the vessel to the Captain of the Russell, claiming that they and not the Russell people were entitled to salvage. Some United States officers afloat in the Bay were authorised to take possession of the schooner. They succeeded so far as to nab all on board the schooner, except the mutinous Captain (the third mate of the Russell) who leaped over upon a cake of ice, and floated to another vessel, thence reached the shore, and there had the vessel libelled. By some process or other the libel did not stick, and lately we have announced that Capt. YEATON and his first and second mates have received $22,100 salvage, and a handsome present of $1,525 from the underwriters for their services.

Now, however, the unfortunate third mate, Mr. SHEPHARD, turns up, claiming the credit of saving the Eclipse as his own. He says that when the Eclipse had been abandoned, not only by her own Captain and crew, but by the Samuel Russell also, he begged to be permitted to fetch her in. His request was granted on condition he could get men to accompany him. Five of the crew volunteered on the understanding that they should share equal portions of the ship's salvage if they succeeded in bringing her safe into port. It was known to be a most hazardous enterprise, as the Eclipse was nearly a total wreck, her main gaff, mainmast and wheel having been carried away, her poop deck stove completely in and her hold and cabin nearly full of water. Having received three days' provisions and a compass and chart, they undertook the experiment. In less than an hour's time the Samuel Russell had sailed out of sight. They were fourteen days reaching Hampton Roads. Their three days' provisions had to serve them for seven days, when they fortunately fell in with a schooner, which supplied them with enough to last them the remainder of the voyage. On the first seven days they suffered very much from having no water to drink. It happened that the fresh water they took on board was put into an old meat barrel and thus became salted. The rest of the story is told above; Mr. SHEPHARD'S luck is hard, certainly. He means to better it at law, if possible. He has engaged the services of Ex-Judge BEBEE and Mr. MCDONOUGH to prosecute his claim for salvage.

The Ship Ashore on Jones' Beach.

The ship reported ashore on Jones' Beach is the New Hampshire, of New-York, Capt. SHELDON, from Glasgow, with a cargo of pig iron, bleaching powder, rags, &c., consigned to ZEREGA & Co., of this City. She went ashore at 2 o'clock (sea time) yesterday morning, during a heavy snow-storm. She lies head on, on the outer bar, about a quarter of a mile from shore; is logged, and has seven feet of water in her hold. She is badly on, and the only prospect of getting her off is in the weather proving favorable enough to get her cargo out of her. She is 23 years old, and is not insured. There is a small portion of her cargo insured in Wall-street. The Captain and crew landed on the beach, early yesterday morning, in their own boats, and Mr. MCDONALD, the first officer, arrived in the City in the afternoon. The New-Hampshire is of 700 tons burden, and is owned by Messrs. ZEREGA & Co., to whom she is consigned. She had no passengers.

NEW-YORK HARMONIC SOCIETY.—The programme of the "Seven Sleepers," announced by this Society for Monday evening, was postponed in consequence of the severity of the storm. It will be given on Monday evening next, at Dodworth's Rooms.

Board of Governors of the Almshouse.

At a meeting of the Board, on Tuesday, the resolutions were read that had been passed by the Board of Education in reference to the control of the Randall's Island School, proposing an amicable suit on the subject.

Governor TIEMAN moved a reference to the Randall's Island Committee.

Governor TOWNSEND asserted the claims of the Governors to entire jurisdiction over the education of the children at Randall's Island.

Governor OLIVER opposed the reference to a Committee. He had previously desired the postponement of action upon the matter.

Governor PINCKNEY argued in support of the reference.

Governor MALONY wished the papers to be laid on the table until the 23th inst. Lost, by a vote of 4 to 4. The motion was renewed in another proposition to make it the special order for the 28th. Adopted.

A petition to the Governor of the State, praying for the pardon of a young Jewess, who had been condemned to the Penitentiary for two years, was adopted and signed by all the members of the Board.

Governor TOWNSEND, who stated the case, satisfactorily proved the movement extremely proper, as it was one of great hardship.

A resolution was received from the Common Council, asking the Board to take charge of Essex Market Prison.

Governor TOWNSEND was not willing to take the building in its unfinished state, which would only enable some contractor to make a few thousand dollars out of the City.

Governor SMITH said the Board had a full copy of the contract to repair that prison.

Governor PINCKNEY thought the prison must be taken directly, and the plumbing attended to without delay, or there would be pestilence in the place shortly. Ultimately, the trust was accepted, and it was determined to ask the Common Council for an appropriation to make the Prison tenable.

THE EMIGRATION BOARD.

The President of the Board of Governors complained of the conduct of the Commissioners of Emigration. They had proceeded to Albany, and had acted in such a way as to justify this Board in adopting strongly worded resolutions. After speaking some time the President offered the following resolution:

Whereas, The said Commissioners of Emigration have presented to the Legislature of the State of New-York their annual report of 1856, wherein they have set forth their indebtedness to the several counties in the State, showing an aggregate of indebtedness of over $100,000, without including the amount due to the City and County of New-York, or even making any reference to the claim presented by this Department, further than stating an undefined and doubtful amount which is represented as in dispute, and—whereas no difference appears to have arisen in regard to Kings County or any other County in the State based upon the technicality pleaded in reference to the account presented by the Board of Governors, and, whereas, great injustice has been done in the opinion of this Department by the passage of what we deem to be an unjust and unconstitutional law, preferring and paying the other counties in the State, and refusing as early, equal and just payments to this county as to the other counties of the State. Therefore be it

Resolved, That it is the duty of the Board of Governors, acting as the official protectors of the appropriations made for charitable purposes by the City and County of New-York, to PROTEST on behalf of the tax-payers against the passage of any law which will furnish out of the sale of the property of the State, or through any other process whatever out of the State Treasury, any sum or sums of money for making payments to any one County, or any number of Counties, in preference to the City and County of New-York, for the disbursements already made or which may be made for the support of the emigrant, lunatic, vagrant or poor. Further, the Board of Governors request that the provision under the law, passed in 1857, for the removal of Quarantine, placing an amount sufficient to liquidate the indebtedness of the Commissioners of Emigration, may be stricken out, or the rights of the City and County of New-York be equally acknowledged with those of other Counties.

Resolved, That a copy of the foregoing be signed by the President and Secretary, and addressed to the Governor of the State, the President of the Senate, the Speaker of Assembly, and the Representatives of the City and County of New-York.

This resolution was adopted unanimously, after which the Board adjourned.

Fires.

IN GRAND-STREET.

The dwelling-house of DAVID RENGLE, No. 511 Grand-street, was on fire at 8 o'clock yesterday morning. It originated in a closet on the second floor, and did about $200 damage. The furniture is insured for $500 in Mechanics and Traders' Insurance Company. The house was damaged to the extent of about $100, and is not insured.

IN ELIZABETH-STREET.

At 9½ o'clock last evening a fire broke out in the unoccupied two-story frame dwelling, No. 229 Elizabeth-street. It originated in the cellar, and is supposed to have been set by an incendiary. The building is owned by JOHN SULLIVAN, and was damaged to the extent of $50. The adjoining building, No. 227, occupied as a grocery by Mr. FARRELL, was also somewhat damaged.

The regular annual examinations of the public schools, which were commenced in September last, ended yesterday. The last school examined was Mrs. M. L. MARSTON'S Girls' School, No. 50. The lowest classes passed the ordeal on Monday, the higher yesterday.

The Committee on School Books of the Board of Education—Wm. JAY HASKETT, Esq., Chairman—is engaged in revising the course of study, and the text books used in the public schools. Their hope—of securing the same text books for all the schools of like grade—would seem a forlorn one. The majority of authors, agents and publishers of the multitudinous volumes in the market and in use are, of course, in opposition. The item of expense involved, in the present loose manner, however, is a large one, and quite unnecessary, while the time saved to pupils by uniform books in all the schools, especially from the 1st of May till the Summer vacation, would be exceedingly great. No book ought to be admitted as a book until a competent Committee either of the Board or of the teachers has determined satisfactorily that it is superior to that which it purposes to displace, and that it is the best class-book yet written on the subject. The Committee's is a delicate and difficult, but important task. We hope it will be faithfully performed.

The Mission to China.

From the Washington Union, Tuesday.

It is understood that the Earl of ELGIN has been appointed by Great Britain to proceed to China as Minister Plenipotentiary of the British Government. Although the ministers of her Majesty have justified the late proceedings of the British officers in China, they yet seem to have thought it wise to avail themselves of the skill and experience of Lord ELGIN in that country.

Many of the public journals anticipate the appointment of a similar functionary by the Government of the United States. Some of them have even gone so far as to state that the position has been offered to certain persons and declined. We have no idea that there is any foundation for such a statement; and without professing to know what may be the course of the Administration on this subject, we may properly add that it is a position of so great importance as to invite to it the most distinguished ability of the Union. The distance of China from our country, the length of time required to reach it or to hear from it, the responsibilities devolved thus upon our minister from necessity, as well as those devolved upon him by the treaty, by the peculiarities of the Chinese, and by our large interests there, render it desirable that he should possess a combination of valuable qualities which it is not always easy to find. Late events hold out also the prospect of great commercial changes in China; and to be able to improve the opportunities that may offer there for the benefit of his country, and in this way to connect his name advantageously with a passage of history which promises to be of deep interest to the world, may well be an object of ambition with any man. We are now at peace with China, and we hope may continue so, but neutrality has its difficulties as well as war, and our affairs in the East demand for their guidance at this juncture great wisdom and discretion. Such guidance, under the auspices of the administration, we believe they will not fail to have, and neither here nor in China will our government be unmindful of the existing troubles in that country, or of the important results which may flow from their adjustment.

COURT OF GENERAL SESSIONS.

Before the Recorder.

At the opening of Court yesterday morning, the following gentlemen were impanneled as Grand Jurors:

BENJAMIN H. DAY, Foreman.
Joseph L. Alliance, Steph. R. Baker, T. DeliaGeld,
[illegible] Bridgeport, H. V. W. Hyslop, John Lyons,
[illegible] Lockwood, C. E. Leveridge, James Marsh,
[illegible] Martine, Josiah Howe, Edward Schell,
[illegible] Thorn, Martin Waters, William Cromwell,
[illegible] Dayton, Benj. H. Field. John T. Farish,
A. T. McDonald, Jr., Israel Underhill, Fulton Cutting.

After the usual oath was administered, the Recorder addressed the Jury in these terms:

GENTLEMEN OF THE GRAND JURY: It is your duty to investigate all charges of a criminal nature which are presented for your consideration. In a large majority of the cases upon which you will be called to pass, you will find that they have previously been investigated by a committing magistrate; and in all such cases the accused party has had the opportunity of being heard, and of presenting his evidence to explain the accusation against him. You are not, however, concluded by the decision of the committing magistrate, and it is your duty, before presenting the party charged, to carefully investigate every charge, notwithstanding there may have been a preliminary examination before a magistrate.

In all cases before you, the investigation is ex parte—the accused cannot be heard. It is, therefore, your duty to scrutinize the evidence with the greatest caution, and if you are enabled to detect the ingredients of private malice, personal revenge, or the desire of gain, in the evidence or motives of complainants, you should pause before presenting accused parties for trial. You are impanneled to serve the public interest, not to pander to private aims and ends.

In cases, therefore, where there has been no preliminary investigation, you will do well to scrutinize with great caution. Hundreds of indictments are found before, upon investigation, it appears that no offence exists. Still a great wrong has been perpetrated against the party charged by the malice of false witnesses, against which there is no adequate redress, and the Grand Jury has been made the innocent and unintentional medium of the perpetration of the wrong. I therefore consider it my duty, gentlemen, to impress upon you the necessity of investigating all cases that originate first before you with extra caution.

I regret to say to you, gentleman, that crime in the City and County of New-York is fearfully on the increase. Murders, robberies, burglaries, larcenies, and assaults and batteries are of such common occurrence that we regard them as the ordinary incidents of the day. With a public prosecutor as vigilant, efficient, and able as any that has held that position for many years in this City, crime increases; neither the public prosecutor nor the courts have the power to check it. The fault, gentlemen, lies in the inefficiency of the police. A partisan police can never be an efficient one; and least of all, men should never be selected for that position whose only merit is partisan services unscrupulously performed.

In one of the wards in this City, I sent to the station-house warrants, for the arrest of notorious offenders, for violent and outrageous assaults perpetrated on inoffending citizens. I could not procure the service of the process, though I ascertained that the offenders had been frequently seen in the company of policemen after the warrants had been issued. While the issuing of the warrants the power of the magistrate is at an end, until the offender is brought before him. The magistrates have no power over the police. But the administration of justice suffers, and there who administer it are censured, in consequence of such gross neglect on the part of the police.

I consider it my duty to say this, gentlemen, that the public may know the reason why some of those bad men who, in November last, rioted in bloodshed and violence, to the terror of our peaceable citizens, have not been brought to justice; to let you and the public understand that the fault does not lie with the Courts or the public prosecutor. You will have some cases presented to you against members of the Police Department, to which I call your especial attention. They are cases of that nature which demand it. There will also be presented to you cases for defrauding emigrants and others taking passage on different steamers for California and other sections of the country. This kind of swindling is reduced to a system, and has become so profitable that men holding high positions, and men of wealth and influence, are engaged in the profits. The complaints made to me in relation to these transactions by those who have been robbed and plundered by this organized band of swindlers have been numerous; and the stories told by the poor victims really heart-rending; I hope, gentlemen, you will investigate this class of cases with great care and patience, and if any one attempts to tamper with or influence you in your action upon these charges, it is a duty you owe to the public to report such person at once to the Court, to be dealt with in the manner the law points out. I have strong reasons, gentlemen, for making this suggestion. By the requirements of the statute it is made my duty to call your attention to the violation of the law reletng to lotteries, the laws relating to usury, the law relating to extortion, the law relating to elections, and the law relating to the prohibition of the sale of liquor. All lotteries in this State are unlawful, and those who are engaged in them are liable to indictment and to punishment by fine and imprisonment. The statute prohibits the taking of more than seven per cent. interest for the use of money. The offender against its provisions is guilty of a misdemeanor, the penalty for which is fine and imprisonment. The statute against extension was enacted to prevent officers from receiving fees to which they were not entitled by law. Like the last-mentioned statute, it is frequently violated, but the offenders are seldom punished. Examples of punishment under this statute would be of great benefit to the community. The statue relating to our elections is one of the most important provisions in our laws; but as there will be no cases presented to you under its provisions at this session, it is only necessary for me to simply call your attention to it. The prohibitory liquor law is unrepealed, but the construction it has received from the Court of Appeals renders it inoperative. That Court having declared its provisions unconstitutional, should you find an indictment under it, it would be the duty of the Court to order it quashed.

Mathias Mandrian, a native of Holland, was tried for an assault on Thomas J. Kipp with intent to kill. Mr. Kipp, whose place of business is in Chambers-street, resides in West Thirty-sixth-street, and employed Mandrian some time during the Summer of 1856, to work for him. Mandrian is a very intemperate man, and when intoxicated is liable to delusions. He imagined that Mr. Kipp owed him $17. Accordingly he went to collect the money on Sunday, Feb. 8, of the present year, in such a way as a very drunken man might do. He entered Mr. Kipp's house, broke into the apartment where he was lying on a sofa, said he would kill him if he did not give him some money, and stabbed at Mr. Kipp with a jack-knife. Mr. Kipp felled him with a chair, and summoned a policeman, who arrested him. There were no witnesses to the transaction. Mandrian was indicted, and emphatically denied the charge. At the direction of Judge RUSSELL, who tried the case, Recorder SMITH having left the bench, the Jury returned a verdict of guilty of simple assault and battery, and in consideration of the prisoner's delusion, while laboring under the effects of intoxication, the Judge suspended judgment, and allowed him to go at large. Mandrian had already been confined two months in the Tombs, awaiting his trial, and Judge RUSSELL considered that punishment enough. In discharging him, the Judge cautioned him that judgment was only suspended, and that if he annoyed Mr. Kipp any further, he would immediately be arrested and sentenced on the present conviction. He promised to be well-behaved, of course. Notwithstanding his haggard and ragged appearance, there was an air of respectability about him, which intimated that but for the debasing effects of liquor he would have occupied a decent position in society.

THE COURT OF SPECIAL SESSIONS.

The amount of business done at the Court of Special Sessions yesterday morning was smaller than usual, though there seemed scarcely any diminution of the interested crowd which every Tuesday and Friday forenoon throngs the Tombs. City Judge Russell presided.

The first party placed at the bar was John Smith, an old man, accused of beating his wife. Mrs. Smith when put upon the stand testified to the assault in a manner that showed she was not very anxious that her husband should be further punished.

The Judge asked John "if he let him go this time whether he would promise not to beat his wife again?"

"Indade an' I will that, Sir," answered John, and he was thereupon allowed to go home with his wife, with the assurance that if again brought up, he would receive the full extent of the law.

Martin Gilhooly was arraigned. His wife, a delicate and meek-looking woman, appeared against him. Her face was black with bruises given her by her husband, and her appearance upon the stand excited a general murmur of indignation.

"Tell your story, Madam," said the Magistrate, and the poor woman in a low voice began:

"Yesterday morning, Sir, my husband went away, between 6 and 7 o'clock, and I did not see him all day. He came home between 6 and 7 o'clock; I did not expect him. He asked me if I had anything to eat; I told him I had not just then. He fell upon me and kicked me, and beat me for a long time with his fists, in the face and about the head, as you see Sir."

"What have you to say for yourself, Gilhooly?" asked the magistrate.

The prisoner muttered something about its being the first time, and then more loudly replied, "I don't know—nothing."

"I shall give you six months in the Penitentiary, and I am sorry I cannot give you three years," said the magistrate. The prisoner was removed.

Two women, named Ann Murphy and Jane McKinney, were arraigned for stealing three sheets from one Michael Engelbrant. They admitted taking the sheets, but said they did so in mistake, having gone into the wrong yard. This plea did not avail. Each was sent for three months to Blackwell's Island.

The accused in defence attempted to show That Betsy drugged the soup, that she was a common receiver of stolen goods, that she had not and did not lose a $20 bill, that the $20 bill was sent to her (Mary Ann) by her husband in California. Mary Ann was "sent up" for three months.

A man named Edward Hawkins was charged with laying violent hands upon policeman James Cushing. The examination elicited some extenuating circumstances, so the accused was let off with ten days' confinement in the City Prison.

Three young men, named Peter Skein, John Lohart and Patrick Dunn, were arraigned for a similar offence. Officer Michael Hogan, of the First Ward, deposed that about 3 o'clock in the morning, (the day after the "Mike Doran Guard" had their ball at Tammany Hall,) while in Broadway, he was startled by the report of a pistol, and, looking towards the opposite sidewalk, discovered the prisoners carousing and "carrying on." He went to them, and told them to move on quietly. Two of the youngsters seized the officer by the throat, made use of an expression not complimentary to his mother, and urged him to perform an act of extraordinary condescension. By the aid of a private watchman they were immediately taken to the station-house. For the defence, John Dalton, First Lieutenant of the First Ward Police, and others, were called to testify to the good character of the accused. Hogan, the complainant, protested against the interference of his Lieutenant, and accused him of unofficer-like conduct, charging him, among other things, with threatening to "put the screws" to him, because he persisted in pressing the complaint against the accused.

In view of their previous good character, the prisoners were only fined $25 each. They were permitted to leave Court with an officer, to hunt up the money.

In Rose-street, next door to the residence of the police captain of the Fourth Ward, a disorderly house is kept, which is so annoying to Captain Ditchett that he arrested his neighbor, whose name is Burbank. No effort was made by the defence to gainsay the accusation, but an affidavit was handed to the Court to show that Burbank had transferred his lease of the premises to his landlord, and was no longer connected with it. The captain intimated that this was a dodge which would not abate the nuisance, and declared that the house was yet open.

The Judge said he would suspend judgment in the case of Burbank, but that if he did not clear away from and close up the premises before Friday, he should be arrested and punished. He then ordered the captain to arrest all the women, if any, who should be in the house on Friday.

A man named Charles Healen was put at the bar for stealing a pair of pantaloons from Betsey Cooper. A venerable old lady, who was supposed to know something about the matter, was put upon the stand, but she declared she would not take an oath in holy Lent for $20. She made a statement, however, which confirmed Betsey Cooper's story, and the magistrate gave him the full extent—six months in the Penitentiary.

A few other cases of a petty nature were disposed of, and the Court adjourned to Friday.

TO THE CITIZENS OF NEW-YORK:
London Cordial Gin,
Medicated Schnapps,
London Club-House Gin,
Schiedam Schnapps.

CAUTION TO THE PUBLIC.

After several years experimenting in the manufacture of gin, I fortunately succeeded, in the year 1848, in making a discovery in its manufacture by which it was deprived of its acrid and inflammatory properties, and rendered perfectly pure.

My manufactory is at Schiedam, Holland. After several months reflection what title to give it, I introduced it to the American public under the title of "WOLFE'S SCHIEDAM AROMATIC SCHNAPPS." Schiedam is the name of the place in Holland where the gin is manufactured; "aromatic" derives its name from the Italian juniper berry with which it is flavored, and the word "Schnapps" is the German for drink—cogne dram—Wolfe's Schiedam aromatic drink. No sooner had my schnapps been introduced to the American public, and received with approbation, than the liquor-mixers of New-York, Boston, and Philadelphia started in pursuit, with their mixed and poisonous stuff, under various names—Scheidam gin, Scheidam schnapps, London Club-House gin, London cordial gin, medicated schnepps, &c.—and in several instances my labels have been so perfectly imitated, with only the addition of a few letters to plead a technical avoidance of the law, and so carefully prepared, as to impose on careless purchasers. I understand a large quantity has been purchased by the merchants of the Southern and Western States, on account of the cheapness of the article. A merchant who participates indirectly in the fraud, by selling the spurious article, is as much an offender as the principal who planned the imposition.

I hope every respectable citizen who values the health of the community in which he lives, will aid me in ferreting out and exposing the unscrupulous merchant who, for the sake of a few cents, will put in jeopardy the lives of the community in which he lives. Such men should be nailed to the pillory of popular execration. UDOLPHO WOLFE,

LONG ISLAND.

Steam on Atlantic-street.

Steam on Atlantic-street still disturbs the Atlantic-street residents—the subject crooking itself into a distracting query every day—that no new excitement displaces it. Probably it always will wrong some of them, just as the steamboat intrusion always will make the captains of clam-boats swear, and railroads annoy sick folks quartered within hearing of them. But the matter of steam on Atlantic-street is no longer a serious question of debate in Brooklyn. The large outlay for the tunnel enthorized by the City and State, the impossibility of carrying freight cars up the heavy grade between Sonth Ferry and Bedford, the treble nuisance that short cars would prove, (drawn as they would have to be) by four horses each, occupying the street's whole length every Summer afternoon to get passengers ont of town, the detriment that its prohibition would be to all of Long Island that lies out of Atlantic street, and the late solemn compromise by which, for considerations exchanged, the right to use it was guaranteed to the Company,—all these considerations make the great body of Brooklyn people regard it as a fixed fact that the Long Island Railroad will still use its tunnel and employ unvexed the only power that can take its trains through to the outskirts.

The Charges Against Alderman Bannon.

The Committee to which was referred the chargee against Alderman BANNON, of the Twelfth Ward, Brooklyn, for being concerned in Tompkins-avenue sewer contract, made their report one week ago last Monday night. The matter was laid on the table for one week, and last Monday evening a minority report was submitted, and both were taken up for consideration. The majority report sets forth that the testimony taken proves that the whole of the money for the contract was paid in favor of Alderman BANNON; that he superintended the work, and discharged and paid off the men employed. The Committee further state that the contractor, Mr. BURNS, and the Inspector of the work, both refused to testify before the Committee. No action is recommended by the majority report. The minority report sets forth that the charges are not proven, and ask for the discharge of the Committee.

After some discussion, the minority report was adopted, by a vote of 20 Ayes to 7 Nays.

River Thieves Arrested.

The canal-boat Excelsior, lying in the Atlantic Basin, Brooklyn, was robbed of twenty bags of wheat Sunday night, by a party of river thieves. Officers were at once started in pursuit, and Monday night officers DILLON, HANLIN, and DOWDLE, of the Third District Police, arrested three men, named CHARLES TRAVERS, ADAM TRAVERS, and CHARLES REYNOLDS, who had three bags of the wheat in their possession. They were taken before Justice BLACHLEY, yesterday morning, and committed for a hearing.

☞ During the week ending Saturday last, there were 86 deaths in Brooklyn.

Brooklyn Board of Education.

The regular monthly meeting of this Board was held yesterday afternoon, Vice-President BAYLIS in the Chair.

After the transaction of considerable business of no general interest the subject of appointing a Secretary of the Board under the recent act passed, was brought up and discussed for several hours. The matter of selecting a candidate for the office was referred to the Finance Committee, and it was referred to a Special Committee of three to report the duties of the new office.

Gas.

According to a statement submitted by the Auditor of Brooklyn to the Common Council, the gas used by the Fire Department during the 14 months ending March 31, cost the City $1,599 81—$1,023 in the Western District, and $516 81 in the Eastern District. While some of the companies used only $2 worth of gas per month, others used $12 and $18 worth.

Fines and Fees.

During the ten weeks ending March 31, Justice BLACHLEY, of Brooklyn, received, in fines and fees, $1,784 89.

NEW-JERSEY.

Clam Pearls.

A Paterson paper says: Quite an excitement has for the past fortnight existed in the upper part of this city, owing to a sort of Pearl Mania. Some parties, a few weeks since, in examining the meat of the fresh water clams, which so abound in the brooks in this vicinity, discovered a pearl of uncommon size and beauty. Upon further searching others were secured, and the fact becoming known, quite a number of our townsmen got wild upon the discovery.

Political.

Those in Hoboken who are opposed to the present Democratic City Government are forming a Reform Party for the Charter election on Tuesday of next week. This new party will hold a City Convention, composed of twenty citizens from each Ward, to nominate a city ticket. This party has nominated Ward tickets. The Councilmen nominated by them are as follows:

First Ward—CHARLES CHAMBERLAIN.
Second Ward—WM. WHITE, (renominated.)
Third Ward—JAMES H. WILSON.

☞ In Jersey City there are 166 places where intoxicating liquors are sold. For a population of a little over 25,000, this gives one rum-shop to every 151 people. They are well patronized.

☞ The Gas Company and the Common Council of Jersey City still combine to keep the town in darkness. There is not a gas lamp lighted in all the streets, and Jersey is the darkest place this side of sun down.

☞ There is again some talk of running a branch of the Jersey Ferry to the foot of Desbrosses-street on the New York side.

☞ The German population of Jersey City comprises 343 families, of which 262 are Protestant, and 81 Roman Catholic.

TUESDAY, April 7—P. M.

Money affairs in Wall-street work satisfactorily. The Discount Brokers quote prime paper 8@9 ₱ cent., and the Stock and Domestic Exchange Brokers of established credit get money at call at 7 ₱ cent. Foreign Exchange for the Boston steamer was further dealt in to-day at 108¾@⅞, though the impression appears to be that the mail will not be a heavy one. The advanced rates on London were paid reluctantly by the Import Trade. At the same time the regular Banking Housee, in the absence of a good supply of transient bills, have command of the market, and at the close of 'Change hour demanded, in some instances, 109 ₱ cent. The extreme quotation for first-class bills, 108¾@109. We hear of no specie going by this packet. The Snb-Treasury disbursed to-day $331,431, against $245,529 received; reducing the balance to $15,089,202. The temporary enlargement of the Bank loans in aid of the heavy payments of the 4th of April caused some remark on the Street, but appears to be well understood in Bank. The preparations for that day ran all through the week, while the payments into Bank on previous discounts were not marked off until after the close of business on Saturday the 4th, and counted but one day of the six on the averaged statement of the week.

The quiet appearance of financial affairs outside the Stock circle, and the assured confidence everywhere else felt in the general well-being and prospects of the trade of the country, afford to-day a very remarkable and striking contrast to the condition of things among the stock-jobbers in the Board of Brokers and on the Street. With some of these gentlemen all values would seem to have come to a nought, and the pertinacity and desperation with which they have played their part against the market has been successful to the extent of producing a lower range of sales and closing quotations to-day than we have recorded for several months past. And while the regular lists of bona fide stockholders on most of the transfer books of the Railway and other shares actively dealt in at the Board have not been materially disturbed, and in some instances the distribution of stock out of the Street enlarged, the Bears have undoubtedly forced the settlement of a large amount of contracts, at highly profitable differences, for the time being, to themselves. A retrospect of the daily list of new contracts sold, however, will show that this enccess has been followed up by renewed engagements to deliver ahead at equally low, if not lower, prices. The additional fall to-day was more general than any previous day, running through almost the entire list from 1@2¾ ₱ cent., showing, in the absence of all ontside cause of distrust, a foregone conclusion on the part of the leading operators for a fall to make the panic of their own creation as general as may be, in order to frighten, if possible, the real holders of the very best, as well as the weaker Stocks on the official list. Such things have happened before in Wall-street, without ostensible or rational cause, and at such seasons a retrospect of the fluctuations of a single month and fortnight may not be ent of

VOL. VI.....NO. 1733 NEW-YORK, THURSDAY, APRIL 9, 1857. PRICE TWO CENTS.

NICARAGUAN AFFAIRS.

NEW YORK, Wednesday, April 8, 1857.

On reference to the daily leading papers of this City, highly important news from Nicaragua was announced in capital letters. The saving clause (if true) should have been added in small italics on your impartial sheets. The American public had been led to believe for a day or two, that the Allies were utterly routed with immense slaughter on the 16th of March. We had also previously been assured, by accounts brought per Steamer Sierra Nevada, that a great battle had taken place on the 15th of the same month, in which "Walker literally mowed down his enemy like grass." Yet it is now known and acknowledged that those flaring accounts, announced as authentic, have proved totally false.

Doubts have now also risen in the public mind as to the degree of credit to be allowed to the last announcements of victory by Walker's party. And as some time must now elapse before reliable news can be received, I have carefully read and analyzed the sources of information.

In the first place, I find the steamer Orizaba was the last vessel which had arrived at Panama from San Juan del Sur up to the sailing of the Texas from Aspinwall on the 22d. The Orizaba left San Juan del Sur on the 18th, where neither the United States Consul, Mr. PARKER, nor any of the inhabitants, had heard any tidings about a battle on the 16th, nor had any accounts of such battle been published, or even whispered at Panama, on or after the arrival there of the Orizaba. If WALKER had won such a battle, the trumpet-sound of victory would have been loud and strong.

Next we find in the Tribune the testimony of a respectable proprietor from Nicaragua, (formerly an adherent of WALKER,) who came down the River San Juan to Greytown, and thence per steamer Texas to New-York. This gentleman was at San Jorge on the morning of the 16th, which place was then well fortified, and occupied by General CANAS' division of the Costa Rican army. They had had no battle on the 17th or 18th, up to the moment he left, at which time it was there known that WALKER and his followers, being in a state of starvation, had left Rivas in the direction of the village of Rosario, followed up by Costa Rican guerrilla parties, and confronted by the allies, whose object appears to have been to prevent those reaching the coast, and effecting WALKER'S escape from Nicaragua by sea, as General CANAS had previously agreed to accept their surrender, on condition that WALKER should be delivered over to the Costa Ricans.

WALKER'S adherents, in this City, now allege that the great battle near Rivas took place, not on the 16th, but on the 19th, at San Jorge, and on the road back again to Rivas.

Two letters have been published, from General HENNINGSEN, in the New-York Herald, dated March 19. The General says the battle took place on the 16th, and describes the victory as decisive with a loss to the Allies of 400 killed, (and, of course, 600 wounded in proportion,) at a sacrifice of only fifty to the Filibusters. How important if true!

Immediately following General HENNINGSEN'S letter, is another "from an officer with General WALKER to a friend in this City," dated Rivas, March 18. It does not tally, as to dates, with HENNINGSEN'S, for he says the battle was fought on the 17th and not on the 16th, as the General alleges. This discrepancy looks bad. So does his estimate of the Allied forces engaged. He says, three times their own number, which would make the Allies engaged amount to 1,050 of whom it is calculated 400 were killed and 600 wounded, leaving only 50 to cut and come again. Very important if true!

By a letter also published in the New-York Herald, and dated March 20, it would appear the Costa Rican guerrilla parties were still alive and on the alert, for that letter says, "they come on the Transit Road, and lie in wait for any weak party of Americans they can cut up."

Next comes the testimony derived from a communication of Captain ANDERSON'S, published in the Sun, and dated Rivas, March 19, stating that a hard contested battle had been fought on the 16th, Monday. The troops (he says) started from Rivas at 3 o'clock in the morning, and opened their fire at daylight upon CANAS' forces in San Jorge; although the accounts given by the Nicaraguan Proprietor to the Tribune leads us to believe that no such attack was made before he left on the morning of the 18th. Capt. ANDERSON says the Costa Ricans charged repeatedly with the bayonet, whenever an opening was made, and that the enemy, after suffering severely, left the Plaza. Then why did not the fillibusters rush in? Did they suspect the trap—did they smell the mines? Did they detect the lines of rifle pits? Were they afraid of the loop-holes in the adobe walls commanding the Plaza? If they had entered that Plaza, not one would have returned to tell the tale.

Capt. ANDERSON then confesses that WALKER'S little army did not exceed 350 men; and that although they had not entered the Plaza, they were completely outnumbered and hemmed in by the enemy—all communication cut off with Rivas, and no food. He continues to say that WALKER then forgot he was President of this glorious Republic, and ordered a retreat to Rivas through his enemies, who had "ambushed themselves all along the road," and from whom they received a constant fire, which he tells us did "but little harm," as "at least 500 shots were fired at the General, but all to no effect." "Very important if true!"

This is all the information we have been able to sift and separate from the chaffs about this great and decisive battle. A few weeks will bring us precise accounts whether WALKER has escaped from Nicaragua, or fallen into the hands of the Costa Ricans, for that seems to be the only question undecided.

Let the accounts brought by the steamer Texas be true or false, the "predetermined issue" of Walkerism in Nicaragua will indubitably remain the same,—It cannot be changed, unless the Government of this country (at the solicitation of the New-York Herald), pronounce for and lend material aid and assistance to a band of unprincipled adventurers, whose chief, from his first onset, has shocked every feeling of chivalry—every impulse of humanity—and every incentive of honor and justice. At what a sacrifice of human life and happiness he has maintained his wretched position and tyrannical sway in Nicaragua!

Three hundred and fifty (according to HENNINGSEN and ANDERSON'S reports) are all that are now left of the 7,000 brave and adventurous youths who departed from our shores in the space of 18 short months to the pestilential fields of Nicaragua. Where are they? shrieks many a bereaved, broken-hearted wife and mother. Where are they? asks shuddering humanity. The happier have died on the field of blood, in a cause without a flag or a creed. The rest have perished by disease, pestilence, and starvation, in their most dreadful form, and the wretched remnant of 350, who have now been driven back to Rivas, emaciated by hunger and sickness, there await their fate at the hands of an exasperated and determined enemy.

Yours respectfully, K. ROMAN.

Col. Benton's Letter on Emancipation in Missouri.

The St. Louis Leader publishes Col. BENTON'S letter opposing Emancipation in Missouri. It was read at a meeting of the St. Louis Democracy on the 2d inst., prefaced by a speech from Mr. HUNTINGTON:

"I saw with amazement," writes Col. BENTON, "the late ABOLITION movement in the Legislature, and wrote immediately to PRICE, RUSK and others at Jefferson City to DENOUNCE and REPUDIATE it. These persons ought to have cut themselves loose from me before they began such an agitation. If they intended to start such a question, they should have let it be known before the election, and not have DECEIVED me.

I was told by many that these persons would turn out for Abolition after the election, but I could not believe it. That a State agitation of Slavery should be added to the National agitation, at the time we were denouncing the National agitation, was an incredible thing.

For persons calling themselves MY FRIENDS, to attack the policy of my whole life,—(the italics are Col. BENTON'S)—TO ATTACK THE POLICY OF MY WHOLE LIFE, after making use of my name to carry an election, is the GREATEST OUTRAGE I HAVE EVER EXPERIENCED. Not one of them has ever approached me on the subject, or has offered any explanation or justification, for it is something which THEY CAN NEITHER EXPLAIN NOR JUSTIFY. They know perfectly well that I introduced the clause against emancipation into the Constitution of the State, with a view to keep this Slavery agitation out of politics, and that my whole life has been opposed to their present course."

[It was signed] THOMAS H. BENTON.

The reading of this letter was interrupted with frequent and enthusiastic applause, which greeted every strong expression.

The Administration and Foreign Affairs.

Correspondence of the Baltimore Sun.

WASHINGTON, Tuesday, April 7.

The cabinet will be engaged this week upon the questions relating to our foreign affairs. I doubt whether diplomatic appointments will be made for a month yet. It is, of course, necessary first to settle upon a distinct line of policy to be pursued in regard to Panama affairs, and our relations with China and with Mexico, &c.

The most pressing question is probably that relating to our difficulty with the Government of New Granada. If Mr. BUCHANAN and Mr. MORSE have failed in their efforts to settle the question with the Granadian Government, it does not follow that no adjustment will be effected. Gen. HERRAN, the minister from New Granada, is here, and is probably empowered to conduct the negotiation to an issue. The matter is, no doubt, to be settled, and by a treaty to be made here.

The future policy of the Government in regard to Mexico is yet to be determined upon. A new treaty with Mexico is very necessary, and the terms of it are to be considered before an appointment of a new minister shall be made.

As Mr. FORSYTH'S treaty has been rejected, it is not to be supposed that he will remain as the minister to negotiate a treaty upon a basis so entirely inconsistent with that to which he has committed himself. He will probably be transferred to some other mission.

It has been announced as news from New-Orleans, that Senator BENJAMIN was to go to Mexico to purchase the Isthmus of Tehuantepec. This is wholly improbable. He could not accept any agency of this sort without resigning his seat in the Senate. He may go to Mexico upon private agency in regard to Tehuantepec.

It is supposed that the new Minister to China, just appointed, will go out with Commodore PERRY, as the future commanding officer of the squadron in the China Sea. ION.

President Madison's Opinion of the Missouri Compromise.

From the Richmond Enquirer.

The Black Republican papers have times without number stated that Mr. MADISON had given it as his opinion that the Missouri Compromise was constitutional, and that he was in favor of the measure. The following extract from a letter written by him, Feb. 23, 1820, to Mr. MONROE, speaks for itself. It will be seen that he gave his opinion against it, not only on the grounds of unconstitutionality, but on the grounds of inexpediency:

MONTPELIER, Feb 23, 1820.

I received yours of the 19th on Monday. The pinch of the difficulty in the case stated seems to be in the words "for ever," coupled with the interdict relating to the territory north of latitude 36° 30'. If the necessary import of these words be, that they are to operate as a condition on future States admitted into the Union, and as a restriction on them after admission, they seem to encounter, indirectly, the arguments which prevailed in the Senate for an unconditional admission of Missouri. I must conclude, therefore, from the assent of the Senate to the words, after the strong vote, on constitutional grounds, against the restriction on Missouri, that there is some other mode of explaining them in their actual application.

As to the right of Congress to apply such a restriction during the territorial period, it depends on the clause specially providing for the management of those subordinate establishments.

On one side it naturally occurs, that the right, being given from the necessity of the case, and in suspension of the great principle of self government, ought not be extended further, nor continued longer, than the occasion might fairly require.

On the other side, it cannot be denied that the constitutional phrase "to make all rules," &c., as expounded by uniform practice, is somewhat of a ductile nature and leaves much to legislative discretion.

The questions to be decided seem to be—

1. Whether a territorial restriction be on assumption of illegitimate power; or,

2. Misuse of legitimate power; and if the latter only, whether the injury threatened to the nation from an acquiescence in the misuse, or from a frustration of it, be the greater.

On the first point, there is certainly room for difference of opinion; though, for myself, I must own that I have always leaned to the belief that the restriction was not within the true scope of the Constitution.

On the alternative presented by the second point, there can be no room, with the cool and candid, for blame on those acquiescing in a conciliatory course, the demand for which was deemed urgent, and the course itself deemed not irreconcilable with the Constitution.

This is the hasty view I have taken of the subject. I am aware that I may be suspected of being influenced by the habit of a guarded construction of constitutional powers; and I have certainly felt all the influence that could justly flow from a conviction, that an uncontrolled dispersion of the slaves now within the United States, was not only best for the nation, but most favorable for the slaves also, both as to their prospects of emancipation, and as to their condition in the meantime. JAMES MADISON.

MARINE.

The Ship New-Hampshire—How She was Lost.

This ship remained in the same position in which she went on, at the time our reporter left the beach yesterday morning at sunrise. One of the wrecking schooners had arrived, and was anchored near by, but there was still too much surf on to permit her to go alongside the ship. She had seven feet water in the hold, eight feet amidships, alongside, and 22 feet under the stern; lying, perfectly upright, on the edge of the outer bar, about 250 yards from the shore. Her position is about four miles east of New Inlet, and within half a mile of the spot where the ship Montezuma was wrecked. Elsewhere will be found a list of her cargo.

Four lighters, including the Underwriters' schooner, have been sent to her, but the wind being fresh from the southward yesterday, the heavy swell will delay the saving of the cargo, and the ship will probably go to pieces the first heavy blow. Capt. SHELDON and crew are at the house of Mr. ZACHARIAH JAMES, near the wreck.

Mr. MCDONALD, the first mate, gives the following particulars of the disaster: They experienced light winds from the S. E. three days, under which the ship crossed the Gulf Stream, sailing three and four knots an hour. On Sunday night it freshened until it blew a gale, which continued through to Monday, canting, towards night, to the S. W., when the rain changed to a driving sleet, which soon covered the rigging and sails with a coating of ice, and made it difficult to handle either. About midnight it lighted up, when they made the Highland Lights bearing N. N. W. About the same time they sounded in 15 fathoms water; this should have given them a position 15 miles from the Long Island shore. The wind now hauled to the westward, and it became very cold, the sails being frozen stiff.

In the course of another hour breakers were discovered only half a mile ahead of the ship, a strong northerly current having imperceptibly set them toward the beach; the helm was immediately put to port to wear the ship round, but, when she came head to the heavy swell, she fell off again, and by the time her head was toward the beach she struck heavily several times. This was at 2 o'clock in the morning. The yards were braced round, but she was beyond the influence of her helm or sails. Seeing she would not go off, order was given to square the yards to press her further on. In a few moments she remained fast, and the old ship, which had breasted the storms of the ocean for a quarter of a century, found her last resting place at the very entrance of her native port. One or two seas broke aboard, but not with sufficient force to sweep anything from off deck. At daylight the men were sent up to furl the sails, and at 10 o'clock the mate and 14 of the crew got out the pinnace, and landed safely through the heavy surf.

After the boat from the ship had performed the perilous feat of landing safely through the surf, the person in charge of the Life-station, with his crew, hauled his boat out of his house, and placed her in a position indicating that, when the sea should become sufficiently smooth, he proposed to attend on the ship!

The wrecking schooner Excelsior sailed Tuesday, and the schooners B. Drummond and J. G. Rotche, and sloop General Washington, sailed yesterday morning for the wreck. The Excelsior took chains, anchors, and steam pumps, and the others are in bal last to receive the cargo. The following is a list of the New-Hampshire's cargo: 302 bags waste, 860 tons pig iron, 157 Chinese cans, 387 bundles hoop iron, 17 cases bedgole, 111 cases rivets, 6 plows, 61 boiler tubes, 31 casks alum, 168 casks sulphur-ammonia, 145 casks bottled ale, 43 bundles rags, 67 crates sheathing felt, 23 packages grain bags, 50 tons gas coal, 35 boxes merchandise, 3 bundles merchandise, 3,000 empty bags.

The Failure to Launch the Queen of the Pacific.

This fine steamer, which was to be launched yesterday morning from WESTERVELT'S yard, stuck on the ways, after going half her length, in consequence of the settling of the ways, letting her bilge down upon the bank. The large crowd which had assembled to witness the spectacle went away greatly disappointed, and expressing much regret at the misfortune. A derrick was employed to lift her stern to prevent her being strained, and the vessel is, apparently, not injured. The steam-tugs Achille and Hector were employed at high water last night, with two hundred men hearing at capstans, with heavy falls, but as late as 10 o'clock there was no prospect of her going off.

Messrs WEBB and BELL will launch from their yard, at Green Point, on Thursday, at 9 o'clock, A. M., a fine bark, 700 tons, called the Magi, built for Messrs. TUCKER, COOPER & Co., and intended for the East India trade, to be commanded by Captain RICHARD LUCE.

The number of vessels in this port, yesterday, was 626, including 35 steamers, 108 ships, 84 barks, 92 brigs, and 307 schooners. Seamen are quite scarce and are in lively demand. The Shipping List gives this revised tabular statement of wages and advances:

	Wages.	Advance.
To Liverpool, per month	$20	$35
To London, per month	20	30
To Havre, per month	20	25
To North of Europe, per month	20	20
Mediterranean and So. Am. per month.	16	20
West Indies, per month	18	18
East Indies and California, per month	15	30
Coasting, per month	20	10

The pilot boat Christian Berg, No. 16, when off the Woodlands, at 7:30 on Tuesday morning, while lying to, was run into by schr. Snow Squall, hence for Georgetown, S. C. The boat had her side cut down to the copper, and was towed up to the city by steamtug Hercules. The schooner had but one man on deck at the time.

Musical.

NATIVE MUSIC.—The New-York American Music Association gives its third concert of the season on the 27th inst. The programme will be the best they have had thus far, combining the styles of vocal and instrumental, classical chamber music, with the more unscientific and popular kinds of solo, piano and choral compositions.

Besides the regular and efficient chorus of the Association, Mrs. GEORGIANNA S. LEACH, Mr. RICHARD HOFFMAN, Mr. WM. A. KING, Mr. J. A. JOHNSON, and Dr. CHAS. A. GUILMETTE, will take part as artists.

MASONIC CONCERT.—We have already adverted to the grand concert to take place at Niblo's, on Saturday evening, for the benefit of the Masonic Board of Relief. This, it seems, is to be the last appearance of OLE BULL in New-York. A grand orchestra from the Philharmonic Society has been engaged, and the Mendelssohn Union have volunteered to perform some of their choicest pieces. MENDELSSHON'S "Loreley," and a trio and chorus from his "Elijah," are among the selections, all of which will be done for the first time, with a full and efficient orchestra. The array of talent presented on the programme and the excellent selections, give a guarantee of one of the richest musical treats of the season.

Medical News.

The following is an extract from a letter recently received by a physician of this City, from Dr. THOMAS MILLER, for many years President of the Board of Health of Washington, D. C.:

"I have never known our City more healthy than at present. The disease which made its appearance at the National Hotel was from a local cause, and never extended beyond the Hotel. One or two or a few of our citizens were affected from eating at or visiting the Hotel, but the disease attacked none others. It was confined to the persons who stopped at the Hotel, and never spread beyond its walls. The Board of Health, after full investigation, are satisfied that the disease arose from local causes, filth, bad sewerage, &c., &c. There never has been a case, which came under our notice, which justified the suspicion that any poison (mineral) had caused it. No fatal case has occurred here."

AN IN-GRAIN MILLIONAIRE.—A Chicago paper states that one of the grain and produce firms in that city handled within the last year, in their business, $12,500,000, their checks on a single bank amounting to $8,000,000. 5,256,000 bushels of grain passed through their hands.

NEW-YORK CITY.

Short Lives and Merry.

We—the people, the citizens—we are careful of our clothes, getting them cut by tailors rather than by oystermen, however jolly,—getting their rents repaired by seamstresses rather than by masons, however sound politically. We have our shoes fitted to our corns by shoemakers even of a different faith rather than by the cleverest of butchers who voted our ticket. But when it comes to the preservation of our lives and health we are not so notional. Hence for a City Inspector we are not so careful to learn whether the candidate is a thorough-bred physician or a Hell-Gate pilot, as whether he can manage the boys at the primary Election. For our Sanitary police we are entirely satisfied with carmen, fish-pedlars, tailors, if only they are sound on the political goose. This is the feeling of the community, and it is honestly represented in the Assembly which strikes out from the amended Charter and Police bills all that was at first inserted, making for us a scientific Sanitary Police.

This happy-go-easy frame of mind which puts down the value of human life at a figure considerably below the importers' price for broad-cloth and calf-skins, is handsomely reflected in the mortality statistics of the City.

In 1810, the proportion of deaths in this City, to the population, was 1 in 46.49,

1815	1 in 41.83	1840	1 in 39.74
1820	1 in 37.19	1845	1 in 37.55
1825	1 in 34.78	1850	1 in 33.52
1835	1 in 40.87	1855	1 in 27.33

Then, special diseases are coming into vogue again that threatened at one time to be utterly exterminated. We are averaging 12 deaths every week from small-pox—showing that there are some 120 cases of this precious disease in full blast here all the time. Yet we make no foolish fuss about it.

What is life? Only a vapor—a very small thing for people to worry about. But clothes!—they take us into society, dine us, and consign us to comfortable coffins. Let things stand as they are. They are good for undertakers and the pot-house politicians. If the ratio of deaths keeps on as it has gone since 1810, in 50 years more a parent will be saved all anxiety about his daughter's middle-age troubles, and the fear of young folks that their parents, uncles and aunts will spend a toothless old age in the poorhouse, is an utter absurdity. One out of every 15 of our race dying yearly we shall wind up our career at its noon, being saved all the annoyance of hair dyes, false teeth, port wine and whites of eggs, tonics, canes and spectacles Street Sprinkling.

The dust in Broadway yesterday was kept down to the breathing point, by a judicious application of the Croton, making that plethoric thoroughfare a delightful promenade. The cost of sprinkling this street is supported by voluntary contributions from the occupants of stores, hotels and places of amusement. This season there are seven contractors who agree to keep the roadway moist from sunrise to sunset, appropriating certain blocks to their individual care. They procure their water from the City hydrants, paying the Aqueduct Department two cents a hogshead therefor. The amount advanced by citizens for this grateful operation varies from fifty to twelve-and-a-half cents a week each. Some who are equally benefitted with the rest, refuse to pay anything, which the contractors of course don't like. There is another thing too that they don't like; the Common Council require them to use a certain kind of sprinkler, which they say not only costs more than those formerly used, but calls for more labor in sprinkling. By the old sprinkler they could water Broadway at three swaths; now it takes six. The Corporation's sprinkler is no shorter than the old one, but it has no holes in the ends of the tin tube from which the water is discharged. Query—Who turns an honest penny by insisting upon the one in use?

Taxes and the New Receiver.

Mr. WILSON SMALL, who succeeds HARRY HOWARD as Tax Receiver, was sworn into office yesterday by Mayor WOOD. THOMAS PEARSON and CHARLES DENNIN became his sureties in the sum of $25,000 each. JOHN P. HONE, the former Deputy Receiver, was reappointed, and filed securities in the sum of $30,000.

The amount of taxes paid in since the 1st of January, on the tax levy for the present year, was $6,682,372 42, leaving a little less than $500,000 still unpaid. The average amount of taxes daily paid in at the present time is about $1,500. Upon all taxes received since the 29th of last February, twelve per cent. interest has been charged, and will continue to be charged until the 1st of next June. Those who paid previous to the 28th of February were charged no interest. On the 1st of next June all the tax-books are sent to the Comptroller, and the taxes remaining then unpaid are put into the hands of the Clerk of Arrears for collection. One of two things is then done—the tax is paid, or the property of the delinquent tax payer is put under the hammer.

The Assessors, who occupy a portion of the TAX Receiver's office, are now busy preparing their assessment rolls for the tax levy of 1858. They have till the 1st of September to complete these rolls.

Payment of the Central Park Police.

Yesterday was the day advertised by the Comptroller as settlement day of the pay of the Central Park policemen. There was a large gathering accordingly at the Comptroller's Office of Central Park policemen, and grocers, butchers, shoemakers, hatters, and gents to whom the unfortunate policemen had to give orders or assignments of their dues. The amount due each policeman was noted, and the sum total of the orders each had given. Warrants on the City Chamberlain will be given this morning to each policeman and his creditors, for the sum they are respectively entitled to. Some of these policemen have sacrificed their claims at a loss of nearly fifty per cent. The total amount due them is $11,500. To engineers, clerks, and laborers there has already been paid $16,500. The present payments only cover services up to the 1st of January.

The Niagara.

The Niagara got up steam yesterday morning, with the intention of proceeding down the Bay, but the delays caused by winding the ship, and getting clear of her berth at the Navy-Yard, made it too late to sail on the morning flood-tide, and she accordingly anchored. About 4 o'clock P. M. she swung to the flood, and her anchor was hove up. She passed down the East River, under steam, in fine style, about 4½ o'clock P. M., large crowds being gathered upon the piers, who watched her movements with great interest and cheering as she passed. A large party was observed on board, among whom were several ladies. She will probably anchor at Quarantine, or at the S. W. Spit, and cross the Bar upon the flood-tide this morning. She expects to be absent three or four days, when she will return, and anchor off Castle Garden. From this place she will soon thereafter sail on her voyage to Liverpool.

Lost Children.

The pleasant weather Sunday, and the frequent turning out of the firemen in answer to the fire alarms, seduced about 40 little urchins so far away from home that they could not find their way back again. The search for them by their excited and frightened parents who met by half-dozens at the office of the Chief of Police and invoked the aid of the police telegraph, was interesting and instructive. Messrs. OWENS, CHAPIN and CROWLY, the operators, busied themselves unceasingly, and in most cases succeeded in learning the whereabouts of the little truants. The celerity with which communications were sent to and received from remote portions of the City astonished many of the searchers amazingly, and when informed of the whereabouts of their children exhibited their joy according to their different natures. Some pulled out their wallets and inquired the charge, and when informed that there was not any, exhibited greater astonishment still, and left wondering, no doubt, what it all meant. The number of lost children is becoming every day more numerous, and the telegraph operators are of opinion that parents are getting less cautious as they know the runaways can be soon found by means of the tel-egraph.

Attempt at Suicide—A Sad Case.

Two brothers named Frederick and Carl Sidsly who arrived here from Germany a short time since, were found yesterday morning by the fifteenth Ward Police sleeping in the unfinished building corner of Broadway and Great Jones street, having no other shelter. Carl, during the night, took arsenic, and was apparently in a dying condition. He was taken to the station-house, where Dr. Jones attended and partly restored him, but he is still in a critical state. These two young men are said to be well educated, and are good mechanics, but have been unable to get employment. They are completely destitute, and had not eaten anything for two days prior to their being taken in charge by the police.

Stopping Stages at the Park.

The Aldermanic Special Committee appointed to inquire into the expediency of stopping a number of South Ferry stages at the City Hall Park, for the relief of the lower part of Broadway, held an adjourned meeting yesterday. Mr. H. E. FIERRE submitted plans for a steam carriage and steam omnibus, which he thought would relieve Broadway of two-thirds of the vehicles now running on it. He proposed that each steam-propelled omnibus should accommodate thirty persons.

Mr. ROBERT BARKLEY, of the Knickerbocker Line opposed the proposition to stop the stages at the Park, on the ground that it would be injurious to him, and not afford the relief sought. He also stated that there would not be sufficient room at the Park for the horses to rest, which, in warm weather, was an important requisite at either end of a stage route. He claimed that the proposed change would cause a daily loss to the proprietors of stage lines, of from a dollar to a dollar and half each stage.

Mr. SINEY, one of the proprietors of the South Ferry, Bowery and Houston-street Line, said that if one stage out of every four of the three hundred and thirty-six licensed to run to the South Ferry were stopped at the Park, according to the proposition before the Committee, it would occasion an aggregate loss of $4,000 per week. He discouraged the practice of many drivers, of walking their horses in order to obtain more passengers.

The Chairman was desirous that the stage proprietors should try the proposed plan for a week, and then if they did not approve of it, he would unite with them in any plan that promised the desired relief.

Bloody Business in Kentucky.

A DOMESTIC TRAGEDY—MURDER AND SUICIDE.

A fearful tragedy was enacted near Mount Washington, in Bullit County, Thursday evening, at the residence of JULIUS BOSEY, an old gentleman, who first took the life of his daughter ESTER, and then his own. The particulars of this bloody deed, from what we can learn are these: A young man named JOHN ROBY, a neighbor, had been paying his addresses to the daughter, who was partial to him, but the match was strenuously opposed by the father of the girl. He had an intimation or impression that they were about to elope to get married, and on the fatal evening the young lady, who was about 17 years of age, told her father, who had but the moment before entered the room, that she would pay a visit to a neighbor. This excited the suspicions of the father, who remonstrated with her and refused to let her leave the house. Angry words ensued, and in the heat of passion, he first struck her, and then drew a revolver and shot her twice, both shots taking effect, one through her head and the other in her back. The unfortunate girl fell dead at his feet, in the presence of the horror-stricken wife and mother.

The wretched man on the instant of committing the deed, rushed from the house with the fatal weapon in his hand, pursued by a son, who had been hastily attracted to the scene by the report of the pistol. He tried to seize his father's arm to prevent further bloodshed, and to wrench the pistol from him, but he eluded his grasp, and, after retreating a few steps, placed the pistol to his own head, and blew his brains out. Mr. BOSEY was a man of some

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT—April 8.

Before Judge Nelson.

The United States vs. Walter Bowne, Executor, &c.—This was a suit brought to recover about $9,000, a balance alleged to be due on a settlement of the accounts of Walter Bowne, deceased, with the Government. The suit was brought on his official bond. The prosecution gave the bond in evidence, and then a Treasury transcript of his accounts. These were excluded by Judge NELSON, not having been made up as his accounts under the bond in question, and not therefore admissible in a suit upon the bond, but only in an action of assumpsit. And the suit, therefore, failed, and was ordered to be discontinued.

For the United States, Mr. McKeon and Mr. Joachimsen. For defendant, Mr. B F. Butler.

SUPREME COURT—Special Term.

Before Hon. Justice Davies.

DECISIONS.

Sterling vs. Russ et al.—The real estate must be deemed to be converted into personalty, and thus distributed. Upon this principle, Griffin or his grantee is entitled to one-seventh, being one-half of what the lots conveyed to him produced, and Sweet to the residue.

CIRCUIT.

Before Hon. Justice Peabody.

CONVEYANCING—ACCEPTANCE OF DEEDS.

Elias Watson vs. Wm. C. Barker.—The plaintiff agreed to sell and convey to defendant who agreed to buy three certain houses subject to certain specified incumbrances, for a certain invoice of dry goods and another of drugs, together amounting to $3,706, more or less.

The plaintiff afterwards caused deeds of the houses to be made and delivered to the defendant, which the latter accepted under the contract, and demanded the drugs, &c., and dry goods in payment, which the plaintiff refused to deliver.

The plaintiff brings this suit to recover the price of the merchandize, which he was to receive for the houses. He claims that the price was fixed by the contract at $3,700. The defendant answers to this claim that the plaintiff has not performed his part, first, because the title to some of the houses made by the deeds was defective; second, the houses (some of them at least) were subject to incumbrances to an amount larger than was stipulated by the contract.

The facts appear to be as stated by the defendant, and the principal question to be decided is, whether they constitute a defence to this action? Can the defendant, after having accepted the deeds of the plaintiff's property, refuse to pay the price he agreed to pay, on the ground that those deeds do not fulfill the original contract on the part of the plaintiff?

The rule appears to be settled that he cannot. That the acceptance of the deeds under the contract to convey is prima facie fulfillment or discharge of the contract. Having chosen to accept the deeds, under the contract he is not permitted to show that they are not such, as he had a right to, and that they do not fulfill it; but he has bound himself by them as substitutes for the original contract, so far as they fail in fact to fulfill it, and his only remedy for a defect of title, or for indemnity against incumbrances, is on the covenants they contain.

If the title he has derived from them is less desirable, or the incumbrances are more onerous than it was agreed they should be, he may have consented to receive less than a full complete fulfillment of the contract, and less than he had a right to demand. He has accepted it, however, "more or less," and the property he acquires by them, as conveyances, is received in fulfillment, pro tanto, and as to anything he was entitled to under the contract which they fail to convey, the covenants in the deeds are accepted in lieu of those in the contract, and to them only can he look for his remedy. No questions as to the measure of damages or value of the goods having been raised by the pleadings, or on the trial, judgment must be for the plaintiff for the amount claimed, deducting certain payments already made.

COMMON PLEAS—Special Term.

Before Hon. Judge Ingraham.

William A. Godfrey vs. Joseph Lester et al.—Judgment for plaintiff.

Lester and Galpin vs. Barnet et al.—Motion dismissed, with $10 costs.

James L. Phillips vs. Bassard L. Powers—Referred to James Maurice.

MARINE COURT.

Before Judge Thompson.

THE NUNS IN COURT, SUING A RAILROAD COMPANY—"THERE'S WHISKY IN THE JUG."

The Sisters of Charity of St. Vincent de Paul vs. The New-York and Harlem Railroad Company.—This action was brought to recover damages for injuries to a horse and the destruction of a wagon and articles contained therein, occasioned by a collision with a locomotive engine belonging to the defendants, at the junction of Fourth-avenue and Fifty-fourth-street. It was proved on the part of the plaintiffs that the wagon was returning from the City with groceries, such as cheese, coffee, raisins, and also two gallons of common whisky, all of which were destined for the use of the inhabitants of the Convent. While crossing the track, the roadway being very much out of order, the wagon got stuck, and while the driver was trying to extricate it, a train came along—the locomotive propelling the wagon and its contents, and injured the horse. On the part of the defendants, it was alleged that the wagon was on the track by the carelessness of the plaintiffs' servant, and that, therefore, the Company was not liable. The driver of the wagon, however, testified that he had used his best efforts to get the horse and wagon from the track.

Before Judge McCarthy.

SUIT FOR FALSE IMPRISONMENT—HORSE-STEALING.

Kane vs. Mollenhauer.—The defendant in this case, a grocer, once owned a bay mare, which, on last Christmas eve, was stolen from him, while he and his wife were witnessing some theatrical performances. On the 9th of March he saw a bay mare in the possession of [illegible], a horse dealer, and instantly claimed it. The plaintiff offered to prove that he had purchased it in Westchester County of a man who had stolen it from a colt, but notwithstanding his protestations and the testimony of a policeman who knew him to be an honest man, the defendant had him arrested and taken before Justice DAVISON. The Justice being acquainted with him, gave him time to get his witnesses, which he did at some expense. Before the examination, Mollenhauer's witnesses convinced him that it was not the same mare, and Mr. Kane was discharged. Mollenhauer refusing to pay his necessary expenses, Mr. K. now sues him for false imprisonment, and it appearing that he had caused the arrest without due caution, the Court gave judgment for the plaintiff for $50.

MISTAKEN AUTHORITY—QUESTION OF LIABILITY.

Mills vs. Pierson.—This was a suit brought by the plaintiff as assignee of one Henry Sharpe for a glass dome furnished in October, 1854, by defendant's orders for a house belonging to Mr. Lanier in Tenth-street, near Fifth-avenue, valued at $60. The assignor swears to the order, but the defendant testified that he had given it on the part of a Mr. James Owen, who had the contract for the building, and that that gentleman alone was liable. Mr. Owen, however, testified that he had never authorized the defendant to order the dome. In this state of the case the Court ruled that, although Mr. B. had undoubtedly thought himself authorized by Mr. Owen, yet he was personally liable, and accordingly gave judgment for the plaintiff for $60 and interest.

COURT OF GENERAL SESSIONS.—Wednesday.

Before Hon. Judge Russell.

The counsel for Kohler and Rosi, indicted for an assault on a female, applied for their discharge yesterday, on the plea of sickness, owing to their long confinement, especially as the prosecutrix was willing to marry the defendant Kohler. The District Attorney refused his consent, and set down the trial for to-morrow.

There were only two trials in the Court yesterday, and they both resulted in a verdict of acquittal. John Hare and Martin Gallagher were tried for robbery in the first degree, but they were so evidently innocent that the Jury acquitted them without quitting their seats. The Grand Jury often find bills of indictment against parties on very loose and insufficient evidence.

Thomas Casey was tried for assaulting Michael Russell with a stung shot with intent to kill. Russell seduced Casey's wife, ran away with her, maltreated her, took away her clothes and left her in a nearly nude state. Casey met Russell in Franklin-street and assaulted him as described. The assault was not denied, but the provocation, it was argued by the prisoner's counsel, was exceedingly great. The Jury at once acquitted Casey.

HEAVY FORGERY—PLEA OF GUILTY.

A man thirty years of age, or thereabouts, of very respectable appearance, named Benjamin Dunham, pleaded guilty to a charge of forging a check for $1,400 on the Bank of Commerce in the name of D vis, Morris & Co., with intent to defraud the Judd Linseed and Sperm Oil Company. Judge RUSSELL deferred passing sentence, remarking that there was a large amount of bonds, involving several thousand dollars, still missing, which the prisoner could, if he pleased, account for. He would therefore defer passing sentence till the second Friday in the term, (to-morrow week,) when, if a restitution of those bonds was made, the sentence would be materially lightened. If not, the full penalty of the law would be visited upon the prisoner, and he would, also, be indicted for another offence.

The Court then adjourned.

Ohio	600	Massachusetts	—

Illinois	900	Texas	—
Kentucky	—	Connecticut	—
Indiana	210	Michigan	—
Virginia	—	New Jersey	—
Iowa	123	Wisconsin	—

Beeves are sold by the estimated dead weight of the four quarters; the so-called "fifth quarter" (hide and tallow) is not reckoned in here as it is in Boston and some other cities. When cattle are weighed or estimated alive, the dead weight is reckoned at a certain number of pounds to the 100 lbs. of live weight, as agreed upon. The general rule in this market for medium cattle is 56 lbs. to the 100; 44 lbs. being allowed for the "fifth quarter" and offal.

The average price to-day, as compared with last week, are about 1c. higher—that is for stock of the same grades.

We quote:

REMARKS UPON THE BEEF MARKET.

We presume few were anticipating a very short supply of cattle to-day, and consequently a marked advance in prices. Certain it is that many butchers were taken by surprise, as they turned out in goodly numbers to replenish their decreasing stock. They had previously made small purchases, both on account of a lighter trade during Lent, and, as is often the case with a falling market, they bought lightly last week. But now their comparatively empty stalls, and the expiring proscriptive season, admonish them to secure new supplies, especially as mutton and poultry are both high. The supply for the day (2,070 head) was all taken at an advance of about 1c. ₱ lb. over last week, and the yards were emptied about the middle of the afternoon. Purchasers—finding such high rates prevailing—bought as sparingly as their wants would admit, and in some instances hastened away to make outside purchases before the actual state of the market could be known. Nor were butchers the only ones who thus left, as several brokers were on the alert, and ere to-day's report reaches far into the country they will probably have their droves for the next market.

The receipts at all the City markets for the week have been more than 600 less than for the previous week. Sales were made at Albany of about 300 head for the Eastern markets, and we believe that no cattle have been kept back which were designed for to-day's market. Unless large numbers are received between this and next Wednesday, the high prices of to-day must continue, as the wants of butchers are increasing, and the stock at Washington Market, per North River boats, is not large.

The quality of the cattle in the yards to-day was not equal to last week, and on that account, as well as because of the greater weights obtained by sellers, the advance is really more notable than the general quotations indicate.

It will be seen, by reference to the table of States, that Illinois contributed nearly one-half of all the cattle at Forty-fourth-street to-day, and that New-York was a small contributor. Next market will, probably, show different figures.

The following are the principal lots on sale to-day, including a few disposed of last evening:

R. R. SEYMOUR forwarded 70 cattle of his own feeding from Ross County, O. They were a fine lot, weighing at home 1,500 lbs. B. BARTRAM disposed of them at about $140 each, or 12½c. ₱ lb. J. INMAN took 10 at $155 ₱ head. This was the best large lot offered to-day.

J. BRYANT contributed 740 cattle, estimated at 750 lbs. which were sold by C. G. TEED at 11c.@12½c. ₱ lb. They were of more than average quality, and early sought by buyers of good meat. J. ANDERSON took 5 at $96 each, and G. DEVOE 10 at $98, or fully 12½c. ₱ lb.

MILLER, HARING & GURNEY sold four lots for as many different parties. One drove at Bergen, for WARREN & VANCE, consisted of 34 Ohio Cattle, estimated at 600 lbs. These were of fair quality, and averaged 11c.

Another lot sold at Forty-fourth-street to-day for N. J. STINGLEY, of Indiana, at 10½c.@12c. They were 45 mixed Cattle of about 700 lbs. weight. The next were 51 pretty fair Marion County, Ohio, Steers, weighing at home 1,200 lbs., and brought $58 50 ₱ head. G. ROBERTS owner. The last lot was 40 Ohio Cattle for JOHNSON & COLDWELL. They were very common light Steers, weighing about 950 lbs., and brought $56 75 each, or 10¾c.@11c. ₱ lb.

MEAD & HOLCOMB sold, on their own account, 102 Ohio cattle, 80 of which were fine bullocks, rated at 725 lbs., and brought about 12c. The others were rather common cattle. Estimated 550 lbs., and sold for 11¼c.

F. LAOKEY furnished 56 fair distillery cattle from Wayne County, N. Y., rated at 650 lbs., which were sold by WELLS & HOXIE, at 10¾c.@12c. ₱ lb.

VAIL & CAREY sold 57 coarse Iowa Oxen for PEARSON & BLISS at about 975 ₱ head, or 11c. ₱ lb. Judged 675 lbs. They also sold 12 of their own Dutchess County stock at about 12c.

WESTHAMMER & EGKSTEIN sold, on their own account, 90 head of Cattle, a portion of which were from this State and the balance from Illinois. These were purchased at Albany, and brought, to-day, 11c.@11¾c. Average weight about 725 lbs. A portion of them were still fed.

MILCH COWS WITH CALVES.

Milch Cows are sold at each of the above yards, usually with their Calves at their sides. The prices vary somewhat with the supply and demand, and very greatly, of course, upon the milking value. The particular fancy of the buyer has also considerable to do with the price. Not unfrequently a Cow is sold at $90@$100, or even $120. The general price throughout the year for ordinary Cows is $30 to $40 or $50. Quite a number sell above $50, and more, perhaps, below $30. We often see apologies for Cows go at $60 @$25. The weekly reports from the different yards will give the weekly fluctuations.

An increase in numbers for the week with no particular variation in price. Sales are not brisk at the present time.

ALLERTON reports 49 Milch Cows received during the week, selling at $30@$35 for common, $40@$50 for good, and $50@$60 for extras. No marked change in prices. Supply good, and selling fair.

BROWNING reports receipts of 79 Milch cows, selling at $25@$30 for common, $40@$50 for good, and $60@$70 for extras. Supply large, with a light demand. Prices not materially changed.

CHAMBERLIN reports 97 Milch Cows, selling at $25@$30 for common; $35@$45 for good; and $50@$65 for extras. No change since last week, with a good supply on hand.

O'BRIEN reports 143 Milch Cows, selling at $20@$40 for common, $40@$50 for good, and a few at $60@$65. Supply exceeds the demand. Good cows sell fair at former prices.

VEAL CALVES.

Veal Calves are sold by live weight, each animal being weighed alive at the time of sale. The principal places of sale are ALLERTON'S, BROWNING'S, CHAMBERLIN'S and O'BRIEN'S.

Receipts continue large, and good ones sell readily. The poor ones, of which there continues to be a fair supply, are worked off with the good. Large arrivals of fair Calves, by the morning boats, render the sales of "bobs" decidedly dull for to-day.

ALLERTON reports 398 Veal Calves, selling for 6c.@7¾c. Receipts not as large as last week, and selling well, the better owing to a short supply of Beeves. Quality generally fair, with only a few "kittens."

BROWNING reports 79 Veal Calves, selling generally at 5c.@6½c., live weight; a very few 7c. ₱ lb. Quality poor.

CHAMBERLIN reports 133 Veal Calves, selling at 5½c. @7c. Supply good, and quality fair; selling as last week.

O'BRIEN reports 102 Veal Calves, selling at 5½c.@ 7c.; a few at 7¾c. Receipts large, and an advance on good Calves, which sell readily.

SHEEP AND LAMBS.

These are chiefly sold at ALLERTON'S, BROWNING'S, and CHAMBERLIN'S, at so much ₱ head for a particular lot of Sheep or Lambs, or of the two together. They are also frequently sold by live weight, as this is readily ascertained. The actual prices at the different yards seldom vary greatly. The difference in reputed prices is generally due to variation in the quality. When they are sold by weight, it is usually the net weight, which is ordinarily one-half what they weigh when alive, the pelt and offal making the other half. If fat and small-boned, they will dress 55 lbs., and in some cases 60 lbs., ₱ hundred. The average run is about one-half the live weight. We noticed several small lots of clipped or shears-d sheep shivering in the cold, and do not hesitate to call the practice of such early shearing inhuman, unless they are to be slaughtered at once. The fleece, it is true, is worth more at home than the difference in cutters usually allow on unshorn sheep, but should a severe snow-storm (not too late yet) overtake an open car load of shorn sheep the owner might too late discover his error.

ALLERTON reports receipts of 833 Sheep and Lambs, which brought $5@$8 ₱ head, or from 12c.@ 14c. ₱ lb. dressed weight. A few at 15c. Market empty this morning. Farmers holding back until after shearing.

BROWNING reports receipts of 1,079 Sheep and Lambs, selling at $5@$10, and one lot of 30 at $12 50 ₱ head. Selling by the pound at 12c.@14c., and a few at 16c.

Receipts from New York and Ohio. The first lot of clipped Sheep arrived from Catskill a few days since. Arrivals to-day, not included in the above, 800 head.

CHAMBERLIN reports receipts of 1,934 Sheep and Lambs, selling at $5@$7 ₱ head, or 10c.@14c. ₱ lb., dressed weight. Stock good and selling better than last week.

Gulfs, 14½c.@14¾c., and other kinds at proportionate rates, ₱ lb. Our available supply is 80,350 bales, against 68,170 bales same date last year.

DRY GOODS—We can report no important changes this week. The demand is not brisk, save for some very choice articles, which are required to perfect broken stocks, or for supplying immediate wants of consumers. Such goods sell well. In other kinds, there is a continuance of the heaviness and irregularity referred to previously.

FLOUR AND MEAL—The market for State and Western Flour is pretty brisk and, in the main, firm. The supply is moderate, while factors show less eagerness to sell, and buyers display more willingness to purchase, especially for home use. Medium and fancy grades bring full rates; common brands show a little heaviness, these not being so much needed, as shippers are moving with reserve. The sales reported since our last reach about 7,600 bbls., in lots, mainly at prices within the annexed range:

Ordinary State	$5 55@$5 60
Straight State	5 60@ 5 65
Favorite and Extra State	5 75@ 6 00
Common to Good Indiana and Upper Lake	5 60@ 5 80
Common to Good Superfine Ohio	5 70@ 5 90
Fancy Michigan	5 75@ 5 95
Extra Indiana and Michigan	5 90@ 7 50
Extra Ohio	6 00@ 7 75

Extra Genesee	6 75@ 6 25
Extra Missouri	6 25@ 6 50

Canadian is in demand, but at easier rates. Superfine to extra is worth $5 90@$7 50 ₱ bbl; 600 bbls. were disposed of within the range. Southern is abundant, and is in good demand, at, however, lower prices. The transactions, since our last, comprise about 3,600 bbls. low Mixed to fair and choice Extra, at $6@ $7 75 and $8@$8 75 ₱ bbl. Rye Flour is salable and steady, at $3 50@$4 65 for Fine to Superfine, ₱ bbl. Corn Meal is in moderate supply and demand, at $3 15@$3 20 for Jersey, and $3 60@$3 65 for Brandywine, ₱ bbl. The latter brings $17@$17 25 in puncheons.

FOREIGN LIQUORS—Mr. SCHMIDT—In his circular for April,—says: "Later advices from France, in answer to the reduction of our tariff, are looked for with anxiety, and as these will be favorable for the article, higher prices here will be the consequence. The trade for our jobbers and consumers has been on a moderate scale. Merchants from the South and West have not made their appearance, the inland communication by water not having opened generally. Cognacs have been principally bought by speculators, and sales were very considerable, the prices ranging from $4 60 to $6 25. Of favorite brands prices have to be quoted as follows: 1855, $5 25; 1852, $5 30; 1851, $5 50; 1850, $5 65; 1849, $5 75; 1848, $6. Rochelle Brandies are in good demand, and prices of lots sold in course of the last month were ranging from $4 to $4 20. Bordeaux Brandies from $3@$3 50. Gin—Prices in Holland are reported to be some what higher; some larger lots sold during the last month brought from $1 20@$1 40." Wines are in good request for regular consumption, at full prices.

FRUIT—The demand is brisker, and prices are firmer, though not higher.

FURS—Are in moderate request, at steady prices. The final report of SAMPSON'S London sales reached us by the Asia. The report mentions that Raccoon went off poorly, the better qualities selling lower than at the commencement, and the lower priced descriptions declined 10@20 ₱ cent. Red Fox sold well and high. Gray Fox sold higher than last Fall, and Cross and Silver Fox rather lower. Otter brought the advanced rates obtained at the Hudson Bay's sale. Sea Otter declined 20 ₱ cent. Fisher sold high. Bear 20 ₱ cent. lower. Northern and Canada Martan remain very low. Musquash sold fully 3 cents apiece lower than at the January sale, and are likely to go lower. Opossum were withdrawn from the sale. Wild Cat sold about the same as last Fall. Mink sold at 10 ₱ cent. better.

The range for all kinds is from $1 48@$1 65 for White, and $1 25@1 50 for Red, ₱ bushel. Rye is also in light supply and request, at from 84c.@88c. ₱ bushel. 2,750 bushels have been sold since our last, within the range. LEGEND.—The mountain forests of Pastoria are inhabited, it is said, by Pixies, Sprites and Elves, who, like the Phantom Dancers of Germany, delight to entrap travelers into their realms and torment them with their mischievous antics. Having the power of transferring the spirit, they often, in their malicious gambols, give life to the newly dead. Statues, rocks and trees are seen fantastically moving in dell to forest, but it is only during the day they retain their fictitious existence; at the approach of night they resume their immobility.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

The Legislature is bestowing laudable industry upon the mass of business which awaits its action. The City bills receive especial attention and are likely to be enacted. In the Senate, yesterday, the bill establishing a Metropolitan Police, which has already passed the Assembly, was reported favorably by the Committee to which it had been referred:—It is now in the hands of the Committee of the whole Senate. The bill recommended by the Harbor Commissioners to establish lines for the piers and bulkheads of the City, was warmly discussed, and passed to a third reading. This bill is of great importance to the commerce of the City, but it is vehemently opposed by parties who have personal interests with which they suppose it would interfere, and there is danger that it may be defeated by their influence. The bill establishing regulations for this port was also passed to a third reading. In the Assembly the City Hall bill was reported favorably, and the bill authorizing the opening of Second-avenue was passed. The Board of Railroad Commissioners sent in a communication to the Senate, alleging the tardiness of the railroad companies in making their returns as the reason of the delay of their report, and recommending their own abolition, unless their powers can be so enlarged as to enable them to accomplish more positive results. This is an act of singular and landable self-denial.

The Administration, we learn from Washington, has completed its arrangements relative to China, and WILLIAM B. REED, Esq., of Philadelphia, has been tendered the Mission. The steamer Minnesota will receive orders to-day to prepare immediately for the China station, in addition to the vessels to which similar orders have already been issued.

A Committee of the Ohio Legislature has made an extended report upon the recent decision of the Supreme Court in the Dred Scott case, accompanied by a bill "to prevent slaveholding and kidnapping" in Ohio. The bill provides severe penalties for persons who shall attempt to hold slaves in the State, to seize or arrest fugitives from service, or to kidnap any person with intent to carry him out of the State for the purpose of enslaving him. The acts of marshals in the execution of legal process are expressly excepted from the operation of law. The composition of the Supreme Court is strongly denounced. Resolutions have also been reported in the Legislature appropriating $100,000 for the protection of Ohio citizens in Kansas.

It will be remembered that a Committee of the Alumni of the South Carolina College, was appointed at the last Commencement of that Institution to procure and present to Professor LIEBER, who recently resigned his post as Professor of History and Political Economy, some suitable testimonial of their high appreciation of his merits and services. We observe by the Charleston papers that this Committee, of which W. C. PRESTON was Chairman, has procured two large silver pitchers, which, with a suitable and highly complimentary inscription are to be presented to Dr. LIEBER. This is a testimonial equally honorable to the recipient, and to those by whom it is bestowed. Professor LIEBER at the time of his resignation had been connected with the College over twenty years.

The steamship Niagara, from Liverpool on the 28th ult., with three days' later advices than those brought by the Canadian at Portland, is now fully due at Halifax. She had not been signaled at a late hour last night.

The bark Alice, Capt. PENNY, from Rio Janeiro, which arrived here yesterday, reports the yellow-fever very bad at that place.

Our Live Stock Market report specifies a considerable falling off in the receipts of Beeves,—an improvement in the demand for these,—and the establishment of an advance, at yesterday's market, of one cent. per pound, on last week's closing currency. Sheep are held back, until the weather will admit of their being "fleeced." Sales of Sheep have been made at Albany, at 8 cents per pound, live weight, for this market. These high prices for the principal kind of stock, lead us to look for substitutes,—and if we could be assured that our butchers did not deal in unwholesome "kittens," we might indulge a liking for veal. Other substitutes, however, are not inaccessible. Eggs will be soon,—if, indeed, they are not now,—as cheap as beef or mutton. Fish, too, are becoming abundant, and the "shad" season being so close at hand—they may be advantageously taken to satisfy, in part, the demand for food.

The northeast end of the Brick Church, which stood yesterday morning as firm as ever, was pulled over to the southward about 4 o'clock P. M., in the presence of thousands of admirers. It had been undermined carefully, and when it fell—"fell all" in one body. Only the arched rear of the ancient pulpit still remains erect on that end.

The Board of Councilmen met on Wednesday, but transacted no business of importance. The Commissioners of Emigration also met, but had no business before them. The Committee on Streets assembled, and listened to arguments against widening Crosby-street, and in favor of altering Nassau-street. A corps of friends willing, but unable to relieve Broadway, were in presence of the Aldermen's Committee, but nothing came of their session.

The Councilmen tried hard to swindle the City last night, but unsuccessfully. Councilman REILLY offered offered a resolution directing the Comptroller to pay no money on contracts not confirmed by the Common Council—meaning, of course, to prevent the payment of the contractors who are just now beginning to make the streets somewhat decent again. No reasons were given—no argument adduced why the work that the whole people so clamorously demanded should not be paid for. The resolution came very suddenly upon the house, and was evidently intended to go through quietly. Councilmen OTTARSON and HASWELL interfered, however, and had it sent off to the Law Committee. The Charter provides for award of the contracts without any reference to the Common Council. But the Common Council enacted an ordinance in 1855 to the effect that their sanction was necessary to the award. It is the case of an emasculated swindler versus the victim that disappoints him—the Common Council hungry for spoils, but narrowly watched, against the people who are bound to have clean streets even if Councilmen must remain poor men.

Central Park claims for work rendered anterior to last New-Year's were presented for auditing to the Comptroller yesterday. The warrants for their settlement will be forthcoming to-day. Mayor WOOD will not be tempted to repeat the little trick with the warrants that so saddened Commissioner EBLING'S heart all the while our Mayor was at the rat-ridden Capitol, so this tedious trial to get their honest dues is almost concluded and happily, especially for the Policemen.

The third of Capt. DE RIVIERE'S very interesting series of lectures on the Crimean War was delivered last night in Hope Chapel. The subject of his paper was a description of the closing scenes of the siege of Sebastopol, and of the details of the capture of the Mamelon and Malakoff. His narrative, which was exceedingly graphic, was interspersed with many personal reminiscences of exciting episodes and hair-breadth escapes. The general history of the siege, however, is so well known, as to need no repetition.

The United States steam frigate Niagara—GEORGE STEERS' pet and pride—departed upon her trial trip yesterday, and will be absent three or four days. She went down the Bay upon the afternoon flood, under steam. Large crowds gathered to observe her movement as she passed out of the East River.

WILSON SMALL was sworn in Tax Receiver yesterday.

The Brooklyn City cars are not to "desecrate the Sabbath" after all. The Board of Directors of the Company held a meeting, yesterday, at which were present all the Directors but one—PURCELL COOKE. The vote on the question of running the cars on Sunday stood as follows:—Ayes—Messrs. Seymour, L. Husted, Amos P. Stanton, Wm. H. Carey, and Henry C. Murphey—4. Nays—Messrs. George L. Howland, Thomas Brooks, Alexander Studwell, John Schenck, Fisher Howe, Lowell Holbrook, Charles C. Betts, and John Kellum—8.

A gang of pickpockets took possession of a circustent in Brooklyn, Tuesday night, and robbed some twenty persons of their money. Several of the thieves were arrested, but no positive proof could be produced against them, and they were accordingly discharged yesterday.

The old project of constructing a railroad on the South side of Long Island has been again revived. What has furnished the hartshorn we don't know.

The Chinese Question.

The intimations contained in our leading article yesterday, concerning the intentions of our Government in regard to China, are fully confirmed by the intelligence from Washington this morning. The President has determined upon sending a special Minister Plenipotentiary to China, accompanied by a suitable naval force, and has appointed WILLIAM B. REED, of Philadelphia, to that important and responsible post. Mr. REED is well known throughout the country as a gentleman of marked ability, an eminent lawyer, and for many years a prominent and active politician. Until the late election he had been a leading member of the Whig Party in Pennsylvania; but he was one of those who, induced partly by their personal regard for Mr. BUCHANAN, and partly by their apprehensions of danger from the alleged sectionalism of the Republican movement, transferred their support to the Democratic candidate for the Presidency. They contributed largely to the result, and Mr. BUCHANAN discharges a political debt, as well as pays a graceful tribute to a personal friend, by the appointment of Mr. REED to this mission.

The appointment strikes us as judicious. Mr. REED is eminently conservative in all his sentiments and sympathies, and is one of the last men in the country who would be likely to enter upon such duties in a spirit of reckless disregard of the rights of other nations or of the requirements of public law. At the same time, he cannot fail to appreciate the importance of the mission which he is to fill, and we are confident he will discharge its duties in a spirit of enlarged statesmanship, and with a view to the interests of civilization throughout the world.

Mr. REED will, as a matter of course, be provided with very full and explicit instructions for the guidance of his official conduct. That they will enjoin upon him the most careful abstinence from everything which can involve us in causeless war with China,—or entangle us in the quarrels and aims of European Powers, it is safe to assume. At the same time, we take it for granted that he would not be sent to China if it were not expected that he will have something to do. It is known that England and France have resolved to make an earnest effort to secure for themselves the right of being represented by Ministers resident at the Imperial Court. There are abundant reasons why this request, so reasonable in itself and so thoroughly in conformity with public usage and public law, should be conceded. We trust that Mr. REED will be instructed to urge the desire of the United States, that the application should be granted and that an American Minister should also have the right of residence at Pekin. We do not expect much in the way of concession, from the secluded and complacent Monarch who rules the destinies of the Central Flowery Kingdom;—but it is quite possible that even he may understand the propriety and policy of conceding a demand, so just in itself, when earnestly pressed by the three great Powers of the Christian world.

Our trade with China is already large and is certain to increase. It is carried on at great disadvantage,—by concessions to, and under regulations from the Chinese authorities which are as humiliating as they are embarrassing, and without any of the safeguards which recognized international law, throws around the commerce of the civilized world. If it is to be continued, it should be put upon a more just and equitable footing. And we hope the result of Mr. REED'S mission may be to secure for it a degree of protection suited to its importance and to the spirit of the age.

AN UNRECIPROCATED ATTACHMENT.—The Richmond Whig does not believe in the possibility of Virginia ever becoming a Free State, notwithstanding the operations of the underground railroad, and the designs of ELI THAYER. The Whig says: "The people of Virginia are sincerely and unalterably attached to their peculiar institution." This may be true; but, attachments that are not reciprocal are rarely lasting. In the case of Virginia and her peculiar institution, it is all on one side. The institution itself being blessed by nature with a will of its own, and the power of locomotion, manifests a decided disposition to tear itself away from its devoted admirer; it is in the constant habit of walking off in small detachments, and losing itself in some of the neighboring States, and in the dominions of Queen VICTORIA. Every new avenue of travel that is opened, every railroad that is built, offers new facilities for the "peculiar institution" to escape; and it is inevitable that in the course of time Virginia should be left, like the hapless Dido, wringing her hands in despair while the object of her affections flies away for freedom and new enjoyments in another quarter.

Slavery in Missouri.

The most significant item in the news of this morning is the complete triumph, in the principal city of a slaveholding State, of a party openly and avowedly in favor of Emancipation. At the charter election in St. Louis the contest turned upon that issue, and the Emancipationists carried it by a very decided vote. There can be no doubt that the disorderly and outrageous proceedings by which the Pro-Slavery Party in Missouri has endeavored to force Slavery upon Kansas,—the agitation of the subject in this connection at home, and the effect which these things have had upon the trade and general business of St. Louis, have brought up this issue at the present time and contributed largely to the result. The people have been compelled to compare the two systems of free and slave labor, with immediate reference to their own interests; and when this point is once reached, in any slaveholding State, the result cannot be doubtful.

The effect of this election upon the public sentiment of the State at large will be very decided. A very large emigration is already pouring into Missouri, from Iowa, Wisconsin and Illinois,—which is attracted by the comparative cheapness of land; and it needs but slight observation after arriving there to show that the only thing necessary to make the farms of Missouri as profitable and as valuable as those of adjoining States, is the substitution of free for slave labor. Almost the entire slave population of the State, which is now about 100,000, is confined to 12 out of the 107 counties in the State. Since 1840 the white population has increased nearly 500,000 and the slaves only 50,000;—and the high price which slaves now command in the cotton-growing States is rapidly diminishing the slave population of the State.

These natural causes, if undisturbed and unchecked by foreign interference, are quite certain to weaken the hold of Slavery in Missouri and eventually to make it a Free State. An effort will undoubtedly be made by the Pro-Slavery Party to connect the question with Federal politics, and thus bring party discipline to bear against the progress of the movement. This will be aided by the over-zealous demonstrations of the opponents of Slavery in other sections of the Union; but we trust it will not succeed. The question is one for the People of Missouri themselves to settle,—and we hope it will be regarded and treated, uniformly and exclusively, as a matter of local and domestic concern.

President Madison's Opinions on the Missouri Compromise.

The difference between a politician trading in phrases and a statesman guided by principles, was never more admirably illustrated than in an article published in the Richmond Enquirer of March 28, on the subject of President MADISON and the Missouri Compromise. The Richmond Enquirer quotes a letter written by Mr. MADISON to Mr. MONROE on the 23d of February, 1820, and infers from the language of that letter that Mr. MADISON would have supported the repeal of the Missouri Compromise and the iniquitous absurdities of the Kansas-Nebraska bill—with what justice let our readers decide.

Mr. MADISON begins by admitting the right of Congress to forbid the extension of Slavery into the Territories while under the control of Congress, and, after maintaining that as "this right is given from the necessity of the case, and in suspension of the great principle of self-government," it ought, perhaps, to be considered as expiring when the Territory, having come to maturity, shall apply for admission as a State. He goes on to express not his conviction, but his "leaning to the belief" that it had not been within the scope of the Constitution to arm Congress with the power of excluding a State from the Union because of the existence within its borders of the institution of Slavery. This of course is and must have been intended by Mr. MADISON, to be a mere expression of opinion upon a point of Constitutional law which was never likely to be tested in political practice, since the admission of full-grown foreign States to the Union was as little contemplated by him as by any other of the framers of the Constitution at the time of the adoption of that instrument. The practical operation of the right which, as he justly says, was conceded "from the necessity of the case" to Congress, of excluding Slavery from the Territories, would naturally exempt Congress from the obligation of discussing the theoretical question of its power to pronounce upon the Institution of Slavery within the borders of any State over whose infancy the salutary exercise of that right had been extended in protection.

So far then Mr. MADISON is clearly at issue with the authors of the Nebraska bill, and the supporters of the Divine Right of Squatterdom, and as clearly in sound constitutional communion with those who assert the power of Congress over Slavery in the Territories.

But Mr. MADISON goes on from a question of principle to a question of policy, and puts himself still more plainly into the position of an avowed and statesmanlike enemy to the extension of Slavery, as that extension is understood and advocated by the politicians of the school of the Richmond Enquirer.

He doubts the propriety of the exercise of the right of Congress to exclude Slavery from the Territories, but why and on what grounds? Because, in his own words, "an uncontrolled dispersion of the slaves now within the United States would be not only best for the nation but most favorable for the slaves themselves both as to their prospects of emancipation and as to their condition in the meantime." That is, he advocates the dispersion of the slaves as the surest means first of ameliorating and then of annihilating Slavery. His object is not to prop up and support the "peculiar institution," but to sap its life and work its overthrow. He is opposed to the Missouri Compromise, not because it will damage the interests of Slavery, but because it will, in his opinion, advance and confirm those interests.

Mr. MADISON endeavored to contemplate the question from the point of view of a statesman, and his mistake was, at least, the mistake of a statesman. The Richmond Enquirer comments upon his words in the spirit of a political caucus, and its inferences are those of a party politician.

The testimony of this letter was not needed to show what were the views of President MADISON to any person at all familiar with the American Constitution, and cognizant of the fact that Mr. MADISON was largely instrumental in drawing it up. But the use which has been attempted to be made of it by the Richmond Enquirer is so curious an illustration of the judicial blindness which visits the fanatics of politics equally with the fanatics of religion, that we have thought it worth while to notice the matter thus briefly. Of course, we do not expect to convert the Richmond Enquirer to a sound and reasonable perception of the flagrant error of its ways, but we trust that an exposure of the enormous blunder which it has, in this instance, made, may at least secure the names of the rational and patriotic men, by whose good sense and right reason the Republic was established, from another prostitution to the support of doctrines against which they contended throughout their lives, and of practices which might almost be expected to rouse them in indignant trouble from their honorable graves.

The South American Republics.

The Republic of Chili presents an agreeable subject of contemplation to those who wish well to the cause of man's progress. This satisfaction is greatly enhanced by the miserable spectacle of disorder and imbecility presented by all the other American populations, from the United States to Patagonia. It is very difficult to perceive what advantages have accrued as yet to any of the States of South America from the expulsion of their Spanish rulers and the change of Governments. Each faction in the various Republics keeps steadily in view the expulsion of their opponents from power and their own aggrandizement at the public cost. Peru, for example, with vast mineral wealth and its large revenue in the guano deposits on the Chincha Islands, has been the scene of revolutions without end. ECHENIQUE drives out CASTILLA; CASTILLA gets his own again, to be attacked by VIVANCO. These very men struggling only for power and place, and the "spoils," do not even accomplish their own objects of making fortunes. The public revenue is idly collected and uselessly squandered—no public improvements, no roads, no manufactures, commerce languishing, and even mining operations at a stand-still; while the guano islands themselves, the very life-blood of the Government, are so lazily worked that vessels have to lie there 70 to 80 days to get their lading; not from the concourse of ships, but from the obstructive dilatoriness of the Government arrangements. One little bit of railway from the port of Callao to Lima, the capital, shows what might be done if there were but order and good improvement,—while Callao itself, the only safe roadstead on the western coast of South America, might absorb all the trade and be made the dépôt for a large commerce.

If from the Pacific we turn to the Atlantic seaboard, the state of affairs is not much more hopeful. The first and last man in Paraguay was FRANCIA; the Argentine Republic is a name, not an entity, and to those who wish to know how deep human nature can sink in moral degradation, and the extreme limit of monarchial imbecility, we recommend a reading of EWBANK'S Brazil, whose details of hopeless superstition, general ignorance and political demoralization have no parallel.

Without any superior local advantages, the Republic of Chili can boast that she is beginning to take a place among the nations. She is even said to contemplate a loan to Costa Rica. And although the sum, $200,000, is not much to talk of, and will be of small benefit to the borrowers, the act speaks well for Chilian resources and for sympathies with distressed nationalities.

In a few years of steady self-government the Chilians have cast off the trammels which fettered their advancement. Public Schools, roads, railways, an increasing commerce, a respectable table of exports and imports, tell their own tale, and bear witness to the energy and industry of the natives. Valparaiso, an open port, exposed to northers and heavy rollers, does a trade far exceeding that of Callao, putting the guano out of the account. It is the southern station of the Pacific Steam Navigation Company. An excellent coal has been found and worked, and is used on board these boats. The mining capabilities of the country are in course of full development, and the agriculture is so far advanced that Chilian flour competes favorably with the best American brands in the Australian market. All this has not been without the aid of foreign capital. On the contrary, there are several British and French houses, of large means, at Valparaiso, to whom the native taste for European articles of luxury and elegance offer excellent inducements. The wealthy residents import even such cumbrous articles as house furniture from abroad, while in the lighter matters of wearing apparel and jewelry there is, perhaps, no where a more lavish disregard of expense, and a greater taste for splendor, both of colors and material. The coasting traffic was formerly done by small vessels, many of which sailed from the ports of the United States, and carried on a kind of smuggling trade, something after the fashion of the opium trade in China,—illegal, yet sanctioned by public opinion, and winked at by local authorities. The English coasting steamers, running from Valparaiso to Panama, and touching at the intermediate ports, have abridged this unlawful trade. These belong to an English Company, and are upheld by a subsidy from the Chilian and Peruvian Governments for carrying the mails, without which, indeed, it is said, they could not proceed, as the passenger traffic alone would not pay. There have been at various times ideas of running an American rival line at lower rates, with the view of opening up the American trade. Nothing of much consequence has been done, probably. The development of our Californian and Mexican relations is work enough for one generation. Perfection is not to be found in human institutions, not even in Republics. The founts of Chilian justice are not very pure. We knew of a lawsuit between two mercantile houses at Valparaiso. When the day of trial was appointed, each of the suitors dispatched a courier with a good supply of gold to be judiciously expended by the lawyers and agents at the capital. The losing party has always attributed the adverse decision of the Court to his messenger's break-down. Judicial purity is the very seal and stamp of highly organized communities; and if we allow only a small share of truth to the rumors that constantly reach the ears of every man whose business brings him across the path of official duty in our own country, we cannot be surprised at some considerable amount of hole-and-corner work in Chili.

Colonel Benton on the Emancipation Movement in Missouri.

The following is from a letter recently written by Col. BENTON to some political friends in St. Louis:

I saw with amazement the late Abolition movement in the Legislature, and wrote immediately to PRIOR, RUSK and others at Jefferson City, to DENOUNCE and REPUDIATE IT. These persons ought to have cut themselves loose from me before they began such an agitation. If they intended to start such a question, they should have let it be known before the election, and not have DECEIVED me.

I was told by many that these persons would turn out for abolition after the election, but I could not believe it. That a State agitation of Slavery should be added to the National agitation, at the time we were denouncing the National agitation, was an incredible thing.

For persons calling themselves MY FRIENDS, to attack the policy of my whole life—TO ATTACK THE POLICY OF MY WHOLE LIFE—after making use of my name to carry an election, is the GREATEST OUTRAGE I HAVE EVER EXPERIENCED. Not one of them has ever approached me on the subject, or has offered any explanation or justification, for it is something which THEY CAN NEITHER EXPLAIN NOR JUSTIFY. They know perfectly well that I introduced the clause against emancipation into the Constitution of the State, with a view to keep this Slavery agitation out of politics, and that my whole life has been opposed to their present course. THOMAS H. BENTON.

The Eastern imagination will probably fail to appreciate the whole extent of the audacity which so astounds the aged and distinguished Ex-Senator. That any considerable number of persons in Missouri should have dared to take any political action, or to express any political opinions without first obtaining his consent, is certainly a most remarkable and unexpected exhibition of personal and political independence. That they should venture to "attack the policy of his whole life," adds immensely to the outrageous character of their conduct. And to cap the climax of their enormities, not one of them has since "approached him on the subject, or offered any explanation or justification" of these extraordinary proceedings!

We are afraid the venerable Colonel is not sufficiently aware of several facts which will gradually impress themselves upon his perceptive faculties. He evidently supposes that the State of Missouri still revolves on his axis, as it did twenty years ago,—and that the world makes no more progress than he has done, in regard to the most important elements in the prosperity of great communities and the dignity and welfare of advancing States. He will not be able much longer to conceal even from himself the fact that his political career is ended,—that men in or out of Missouri no longer look to him either for action or for counsel,—and that all the world expects at his hands is a laborious and useful compilation of what has hitherto been said and done in the National Congress. He may win distinction by condensing history—but he can add nothing to it which will benefit the world at large or his own reputation.

AN OVER-SENSITIVE EDITOR.—The Newark (N. J.) Mercury, is the very mimosa of newspapers. One cannot look across the Jersey Flats but it begins to tremble. The mere act of appointing a Committee by the Governor of our State to confer with the authorities of New-Jersey in relation to Quarantine matters, threw the whole of the State of Camden and Amboy into a tremor, and we did but mention the other day the fact that a wealthy gentleman in Newark had given a most liberal commission to four of our artists, to paint for him four great pictures, when our Newark cotemporary sees in the bare announcement an attempt at wit, and sneers and carping. We entirely agree with the sagacious remark of the Mercury, that "It is one thing to deal with the political errors of a public man, and another thing to carp and sneer at a generous and worthy patronage of art." And therefore we do not see what necessity there was for that paper to seize on the occasion of copying our notice of Mr. WRIGHT'S liberal patronage of art to say that "his course in the Senate was in contradiction to the dictates of Humanity and Justice." We must confess that our New-Jersey cotemporary has a rather odd way of defending his neighbor.

But our Newark cotemporary might have spared itself all its trouble on account of Hon. Mr. WRIGHT. It happens to be another gentleman of the same name, residing in Hoboken, who gave the order for the pictures. It is Mr. WILLIAM P. WRIGHT, of Hoboken, and not Hon. WILLIAM WRIGHT, of Newark, who has distinguished himself by this liberal patronage of art.

Republican Committees.

The Old and the Young Men's Republican Committees met last evening in Stuyvesant Institute. At the former no business of interest was transacted. The latter adopted a series of resolutions in reference to the recent decision of the United States Supreme Court in the case of DRED SCOTT, and some resolutions offered by Mr. WEST, of the Third Ward, in relation to Land Reform, were laid over till the next meeting.

☞ It has been ascertained that the population of New-York exceeds 600,000, and the church sittings are not equal to 200,000. To meet the deficiency, it would require 600 new churches, to be built at an expense of more than eight million dollars.

I love the land where Freedom dwells,
Though bleak its hills and bare its dells,
And wintry cold its skies;
There, flouting not the tyrant's rod,
Man wears the image of his God,
As when in Paradise.

The rudest rock and desert sand,
Grow fertile as a garden land,
If Freedom's soul is there;
She gives the earth a brighter green,
She lends the wave a fairer sheen—
Robes rock and desert bare.

There every man's of noble birth,
A God made sovereign of the earth,
Within his own domain;
And kings may chafe, and priests may ban,
They cannot lord it over man,
Where Freedom breaks the chain.

I love the land where Freedom dwells,
The land of Washingtons and Tells,
Hofers and Bolivars;
The land whose flag goes waving bright,
To fling against oppression's night,
The glow of Freedom's stars!

THE WILD KNIGHT OR THE UNKNOWN CRUSADER.

A Tale of Germany in the Days of the Empire.

BY SYLVANUS COBB, JR.

CHAPTER I.

THE UNKNOWN AND HIS COMPANIONS.

At the time of which we write, the German Empire was in anything but a tranquil state. Rudolf of Hapsburg had been elected Emperor solely because he was a brave, unscrupulous man. He had accepted the Imperial post with the pledge that he would be the blind, unswerving tool of the church. The Hanse Towns, or cities, were leagued together for mutual interest and protection, forming so many almost independent governments. The princes were in many instances reduced in power, holding the peasants in vassalage; while over all, and carrying terror even to the stout cities, were those wild, robber knights, whose castles, like the eyries of the eagles, were perched away upon mountains and rocks, from whence their reckless lords looked down in disdain upon all who dwelt beneath. In the East the crusades were drawing to a close. Baldwin II. had been driven from the throne of Byzantium; Jerusalem was in the hands of the sons of Islam; Antioch had been taken with the slaughter of seventeen thousand Christians, while a hundred thousand more were dragged away into slavery; Armenia had been overrun and conquered; a large portion of the army of Louis of France had either died of disease, or by the hand of the Saracen, and the remainder had returned to their Western homes. Yet there were many Christians in the Holy Land, and Gregory tried hard to send out more, but he did not succeed. Even his pliant tool, the Emperor Rudolf von Hapsburg, refused to obey him in this.

It was an afternoon in the Spring of 1274. Since noon the heavens had been manned with clouds, and now, when the sun had some four hours more to run, the wind had sprung up, and the signs were that rain was near at hand.

Upon the dubious road from Brackenheim to Dnrmen, just in the northeastern confines of the Black Forest, rode four armed men. He who rode in advance—for the path was so narrow here among the huge rocks that two could not ride abreast—was a noble looking knight, tall and powerfully built, clothed in complete armor, with his heavy battle-axe slung in its becket by his side; his lance at rest and his helmet suspended from a loop at the saddle bow. The armor was black as night—all save the gorget, which was of burnished gold, set with precious stones. Even the casque was of the sable hue, though the three brilliant ostrich feathers which floated from the top relieved the sombre effect. Upon his head he wore a light cap of purple velvet, with no other ornament than a rich brooch of gold and emeralds which secured the crimson ostrich plume in its place. His face was one of rare and startling beauty—one of those faces which awaken envy in the bosom of beaux, and quick love in the souls of the gentler sex. His brow was high and full, and about it and the fair neck floated glossy masses of light, sunny hair. His eyes were of a deep blue; his nose straight and finely carved; his lips fairly proportioned and wreathed with a half-waking smile, and his cheeks full and flushed with the ruddy glow of health and vigor. His surcoat, which hung across the saddle, bore upon the breast the red cross of the Crusaders. His shield bore a strange device. It was a child battling an eagle, with this inscription: "Quod Deus bene vertat," which may be rendered,—May God bring it to a good result. The child was upon its knees, with one hand clasped about the eagle's throat, while the other held a raised dagger. The knight could not have been over thirty years of age, though he had surely seen much of life.

And now what is this bold knight's name? In Palestine he was known as "The Knight of the Eagle," and finally, to shorten the name, he was called "The Black Eagle." Since he had left the Holy Land he had received one more cognomen: "The Unknown Crusader." And yet, with all these, he still remains without a Christian name. Even when all Palestine and half of Europe were filled with the song and story of his wondrous prowess, they could not tell his name, whence he came, nor where he belonged. Upon that point he had reserved a stern silence; and the most that the Emperor Baldwin could gain from him, when he bestowed the honor of knighthood, was a simple declaration to this effect:

"Upon my name there rests no stain—in my soul there is no wrong. I can look up to our God and implore His protection, feeling that I am worthy of it; and into the face of any honest knight of Christendom I can look without a blush. Call me Sir Knight of the Eagle, and this name shall not be dishonored."

Baldwin had asked no more. With the memory of the youth's feats of noble daring fresh upon him he gave him the magic stroke of the imperial sword, and with his own hands did he buckle on the golden spur.

Behind the Unknown rode a second knight of nearly the same age with the former. He was not quite so tall, but full as broad-shouldered, and possessed a goodly share of manly beauty. In fact he was a noble, handsome-looking knight, and such as one as no mistress would have spurned upon her with gracious and pride. His armor was of the same pattern as his companion's, but not of the same color. The casque was of burnished steel, the gorget of the same, and the rest of the armor—the cuirass, the tasses, the brassets and the cuisses—of green and gold in color, though of good, well-tried steel in substance. He also wore a velvet cap upon his head, and carried across his saddle the surcoat of the Crusader. His name was Engelbert von Marburg, and he was known throughout the Holy Land as one of the bravest knights that ever couched a lance against the infidel Saracen. His weapons were the same as those carried by the Unknown, save that they were not quite as heavy.

Behind Sir Engelbert rode the two esquires. They were also well armed, and wore the brassets and cuisses in addition to the cuirass. Robert von Swingenhoffen was forty years of age; short and heavily framed; with great bones and sinews, almost like an ox; a red face and red hair; and possessed of much ready wit. He had served under Baldwin as an esquire, and during said service had performed many valorous deeds. One day, at the taking of a fortified town, he became surrounded by half a dozen stout Moslems, and had given himself up as lost, and said his prayers, when the Knight of the Eagle burst in upon him, slew his enemies, and bore him away in safety. Baldwin saw the deed, and from that hour he gave Robert von Swingenhoffen to the Black Eagle, to serve him as best he could. And he had been faithful. He loved his valiant master, and was ready at any moment to lay down his life for the good of him who had once saved it.

The fourth person in the party was Bernard von Schaffenhausen. He was some five years younger than Robert, and very unlike him in frame, being very tall—all of six feet and a half, and rather slim for such height. Yet he was strong, and overrunning with fun and good nature. That he was a faithful and brave esquire, Sir Engelbert well knew, for he had served the noble knight several years.

The road by which the party thus traveled was one of the wildest in the country. The giant trees stood thickly about where the surface was not of rock, and upon all hands the rugged mountains arose like sentinels of the empire.

At times the path was through a dense wood—then over a rugged cliff, then along a deep ravine—and anon upon the narrow pass that girded some perpendicular wall of rock. At length they reached a wide wood, through which the road was level and broad, and here Sir Engelbert rode up to his companion's side, and said,

"Do you not remember once, in Constantinople, you told me when we reached Germany I might know your name, and who you were?"

"Yes," returned the Black Knight, "I do remember it; but the time is not yet come. I must first see how the wind blows. If I mistake not, this Rndolf Von Hapsburg, whom the Pope has made Emperor, is a—a—mere puppet."

"I think so too," added Marburg. "And so you still mean to remain The Unknown?"

"For the present I must."

"It's curious. Here we have been companions in arms for six long years—slept beneath the same tent—eaten from the same huckler when we had no plates—fought together side by side through a hundred bloody battles—nursed each other in sickness—and cheered each other in health—and yet, when I am asked 'Who is your friend?' I can only say, 'The Unknown.'"

"And the thousand Muselmen, when they pass Al Sirat, and are asked by the recording angel who sent them thither, must give the same answer," returned he of the Eagle, with a smile.

"Aye—more than a thousand."

"Stop, good Marburg. By my faith, I take no pleasure in thinking how many of the poor fellows I have slain."

"Yes, Sir Unknown, the wondrous deeds of your arm have given you a name which you cannot hide so long as you wear the device upon your shield. I have been thinking of the last Moslem you slew. It does not trouble you to think of that?"

"Ah, no," the Black Knight uttered, with a glowing eye, while his hand instinctively sank to his sword hilt with a nervous clutch. "It was at Carthage, where I struck down the three stout emirs who had surrounded Prince Philip of France. And see—here is his royal father's gift in token of his gratitude." And as he spoke he placed his hand upon the richly jeweled gorget that hung upon his neck.

"Ha!" cried Sir Englebert, just as the other ceased speaking, "look there."

The Unknown looked in the direction pointed out, and saw the turrets of a massive structure looming up against the darkened sky.

"What is it?" he asked.

"It is our good Convant of Saint Fulvia."

"A female establishment?"

"Yes—in part. There are some Benedictines there, I believe, who perform the out-door labor. By my faith, we are just in time, for see—the rain is already falling on the mountains."

The party spurred up and reached the convent gates just as the great drops of rain began to fall.

CHAPTER II.

AGNES OF LUXEMBURG.

The Convent of St. Fulvia was situated within the precincts of Maulbroun, though some miles from any other habitation. It was upon a small piece of table land, where there were a few acres fit for cultivation; and this limited piece the Benedictines cultivated to so good a purpose that the inhabitants of the building seldom had to go to any other market for the fruits or vegetables.

Within the large ante-room of the convent sat a middle-aged woman, whose garb bespoke her to be the abbess, or lady superior of the place. She was not far from fifty, stout and rugged, and wore upon her face a look of deep piety and goodness of heart.

By the side of the abbess sat a maiden, who could not have seen more than nineteen years of age. She was of medium height, full and plump in form, with a skin of almost dazzling purity; her long, floating ringlets, of a deep, golden hue; and her eyes a mild liquid blue. Her dress was far from being gaudy or showy, but yet it plainly bespoke her as one of gentle blood and of noble family. Such was Agnes von Luxemburg, an orphan, and sole heiress to the broad estates of the late count, her father, who was an own brother of the abbess. And she was accounted the fairest maiden in Swabia, as she might well be, for surely no being of human mould could be more beautiful. It was not so much the faultless carving of her features, nor yet the voluptuous symmetry of her form; for the first was exceeded by the pure and joyous essence of her smiles, while the latter was overbalanced by the atmosphere of stern and lofty virtue that surrounded her like a halo. Few men had ever seen Agnes of Luxemburg without loving her; and at her feet had been laid half the estates of Swabia. But she had not yet looked with favor upon any of the aspirants, though that may be accounted for upon the fact that ere her father died he had expressed his wish that she should marry with the Count of Baden.

"Ah—there it comes," spoke the abbess, as the great drops of rain began to drive against the casements. "I knew it was near at hand; and our fire will not be out of place."

"No," returned Agnes, "for it is already cold and cheerless without. I wonder if there are travelers among the mountains?"

"Very likely there may be. I suppose you are wondering if the Count of Baden will come for you?"

"No—no!" quickly uttered the maiden with a shudder.

"Ah, Agnes—I have your secret. You love another."

"No, my mother, you are mistaken there." This was spoken in a tone which left no room for doubt, at least in the mind of one who knew the speaker.

"But you do not love the Count Rudolf?"

Agnes hung down her head, and for a moment there was a tremulousness upon her. At length she raised her eyes to her companion's face, and in a tone of affectionate frankness she said:

"You have spoken the truth, lady, I cannot love him."

"Nor could I," rejoined the abbess, emphatically. "Not only is the seal of repulsiveness set upon his face, but he is a bad man."

"You are right again, lady."

"Then, of course, you will not become his wife?"

"Oh—I know not what to do!" the maiden cried, resting her head upon her companion's shoulder, and throwing her arms about her neck.

"Then let me advise you," said the abbess, drawing the beautiful girl more closely to her bosom, and speaking in gentle tones: "You are young and handsome. Your father's wish is left upon record that you should marry with Rudolph von Baden—when you were ready to wed. I can appreciate your feelings in turning away the scores of noble knights that have knelt at your feet."

"I did not love them, mother—indeed I did not."

"But among them all may there not have been one whom you would have loved had you not been bound by this plan of your father's?"

"I will not deny it."

"Then come and wed with our sisterhood."

The maiden started as though something had frightened her. The abbess saw the movement, and she quickly comprehended its meaning.

"Does it make you tremble?" she asked.

"Oh! I am not prepared to answer now. I am not fit for communion with your holy sisterhood."

"Then are there none on earth fit. Ah, Agnes, I fear your pride prompted that speech."

"My pride?"

"Yes, my child; for you must know that you are among the purest of our daughters."

"Well, well—let it pass now, I am not ready to answer such a question."

"And yet you know your father bade me to watch over you."

"Because you were his own sister, and he knew you loved me."

"Aye," added the abbess, imprinting a warm kiss upon the girl's fair brow as she spoke, "and he knew I should always love you. But—hark! What sound is that?"

In a few moments more the old porter appeared, and announced that two knights of the Cross and their esquires asked for shelter from the storm.

"Crusaders—are they?"

"They are."

"And did ye leave them at the gate?"

"I did."

"Out, thick-head, and lead them in quickly! Leave two knights of the Holy Cross in the storm with a shelter under their very eyes! Away—and lead them hither at once! and then see that their horses are cared for."

The porter retired, and then the abbess turned to Agnes.

"You will stay, my sweet child, and help me entertain the noble knights?"

"Certainly I will. Agnes of Luxemburg holds not her hands nor purse from the brave soldiers of the Cross." The maiden's eyes burned with a generous glow as she spoke, and upon her cheeks arose a rich rush of grateful emotion. Her father had made one crusade, and from his lips she had learned the fearful story of the dangers and privations which the devoted knights of the Cross had to suffer.

"Welcome, noble sirs, and God's blessing be upon you!" spoke the abbess, as she arose to greet the strangers.

"We thank thee, lady; and will pray Heaven to bless this house!" responded the Black Knight.

"And your esquires—where are they?"

"With the groom, lady. They will find welcome with the porter, I think."

"As you will. If they choose the porter's lodge, so be it."

Ere Agnes was introduced, the abbess conducted her guests to an adjoining apartment, where they might lay aside their armor. When they had done this, their noble forms were shown to better advantage. The Unknown was habited in a garb of black velvet throughout, which, though it possessed a sombre look, yet gave to his form and features a lofty dignity and grandeur. Sir Engelbert's garb was of a less grave character, though far from rich or gaudy. When they returned to the large sitting-room, even the abbess was startled by the strange beauty of her guests, but more particularly did she fasten her eyes upon the face of the Unknown; and it was not until he of Marburg spoke that she recollected herself.

"Your good convent was placed in the proper spot for us on this particular occasion," he said.

"So I hope it may ever be for the good of noble knights like you. This is the Convent of Saint Fulvia, and I am its abbess."

"And I am called Engelbert of Marburg. And," the crusader added, with a smile, "my companion you can only know as you see him. He is The Knight of the Eagle."

"How!" cried the abbess, while Agnes started with mingled surprise and wonder: "The noble Knight of the Eagle?—He of whom we have heard so much?—The savior of Baldwin, of Louis, of Brandenburg, and of even whole cities?"

"The same, lady."

"Hold," spoke the Unknown, with a faint smile. "Let me rest easy, I pray thee. Lay no more flattery upon me."

"If I do," replied the abbess quickly, "I'll beg thy pardon beforehand. But let me introduce my niece, Agnes of Luxemburg."

Sir Engelbert took the maiden's hand, and she smiled sweetly upon him as he greeted her. Then the Black Knight approached, and his hand trembled as he extended it. Agnes gazed into his face, and the smile faded from her lips, and a tremor shook her frame. For the life of her she could not tell whence came this quick emotion; only she felt the slight trembling of the Knight's hand, as her own rested within it, and she saw the sudden light that beamed in his deep blue eyes.

Supper was soon prepared, and, after the meal was over, the party soon returned to the large room. The Unknown was the last one to be seated, and if we would sit near the cheerful fire, he must take the only empty stool, and that was close by Agnes. He took it, and ere long the Knight were recounting their adventures to the willing listeners.

As the evening advanced the Unknown turned his attention more particularly to Agnes, and with eager, generous looks, she listened to him. At her own request, he told her of his adventures, while his companion was conversing with the abbess.

"And now," said the maiden, after the knight had told her of his last exploits in Carthage, "you must be cheered by the thought that you are soon to return to your friends."

"Friends?" repeated he, in a low, sad tone. "Ah—my friends are ——. But I won't say that. This reception tells me that I have friends. I will not believe that your generous hospitality is extended without some spark of friendship."

"Indeed, sir Knight," uttered Agnes, speaking from her ardent impulse, and without thought, "you may be sure of that. My own poor life would be nobly given, if 'twere to save and succor thee."

The Unknown started as these sweet words fell upon his ear, and for the moment, the rich blood ebb left his face, and his heart seemed to have stopped its beating. But very soon the flood came rushing back, and the first bound of the heart gave a tremulousness to the whole frame.

"I—I—mean, sir——"

"Hold, lady," he said, as the fair girl attempted to modify what she saw she had spoken quickly and from the heart, "do not take back those words. They shall never leave me while life and reason last. They shall be with me to cheer and console me, and to give nerve to my arm, and strength to my heart. As true as God reigns, they are the sweetest words that have dropped upon my soul since my dying mother placed her thin hands upon my child head, and blessed me. Do not unsay them—unless, indeed, they only came from a hope to please. But if they came from the heart, then let them be mine."

"I will be frank, sir knight," the fair girl returned, with a beaming, generous look. "Had they not not sprung from the heart, you would never have heard them. The heart set them free ere the cooler judgment had weighed them."

"Thank you, lady; and henceforth you may rest assured that there is one knight who will protect the honor of your name with his life. And though, for the present, circumstances prevent me from revealing my name, yet you will believe me when I say, that no stain rests upon me."

Agnes bowed her head, and her whole frame trembled, but soon she recovered her composure, and once more her conversation was free and frank.

It was quite late when the party separated, and an old monk conducted the knights to their chamber.

CHAPTER III.

THE ROBBER KNIGHTS.

The two knights were aroused in the morning by a loud knocking at their door, and upon opening it they found the same monk there, who had shown them up on the night before.

"Noble Sirs," the old man cried, "a party of the robber knights have come to rob the convent."

"How?" uttered the Unknown. "Rob a nunnery? Rob the home of defenceless women?"

"Yes, noble Sir. They are now at the gate, and demand admittance."

"How many of them?"

"Full a score."

"Then hasten down and tell the good lady abbess that we will be quickly with her."

Ere long the two crusaders descended to the apartment where they had sat the evening before, and there they found not only the abbess and Agnes, but several other women who had not yet taken the full vow.

"How is this?" asked he of the Eagle, as he entered the room.

"Do you not hear that noise at our gates, Sir?" the abbess returned. "That wicked knight, Otto von Metzinger, at the head of his companions, demands admittance here."

"But he does not surely mean to rob you?"

"Yes, Sir. Ah—you know not the deep wickedness of these men. Yet there are few who would do this thing. That most bold and reckless man of them all—the Wild Knight of Wurtemberg—would never attack the home of women. His robs cities and wealthy monasteries. But this man stops at nothing. His vaults are already filled with gold, and yet he would rob us for more."

"Then you have valuables here?"

"Yes, Sir—shrines of gold and silver, besides a large amount of money which we have collected."

"And have you any here who can bear arms?"

"Yes—a dozen or more; but they could do nothing against the well-armed kulghts."

"Let them be armed as best they can, and trust the rest to us." Thus speaking, the mystic knight passed over to where Agnes stood, and, taking her hand, he said, in a low, deep tone—

"Fear not, lady. While I have life thou art safe."

Could he mistake the look she gave him then? Could that quick, holy, joyful expression have come from a heart that held no deep love? No. But mark that blanche spot that followed—that sudden show of fear. Why does she lay her fair, dimpled hand so nervously upon the stout knight's arm? Ah——

"But you—you, Sir. Oh! you will not expose yourself. There are many—you are only two."

"Many in the wrong—and two in the right. God is with us. But be not alarmed for me. He who will rob a woman can have no terror for me."

"Yet you will be careful?"

"Oh—thy love plants the strength of a thousand souls in my bosom!"

As the knight thus spoke, he raised the small white hand to his lips, and, as he imprinted his first kiss thereon, Agnes of Luxemburg smiled

Those were days when true men and maidens spent not long hours in senseless flirtation, nor tried to conceal the generous emotions of the heart. If the thought was right 'twas spoken. So from that hour the Knight of the Eagle knew that he was welcomed by the only maiden who had ever won his heart. The emotion was a strange one, and under its influence his heart grew light and joyous and his arm stronger.

As soon as possible the two crusaders put on their armor, and then went out into the court where they found Robert and Bernard with the horses all caparisoned; and from the porter they learned that Von Metzinger was waiting an answer from him. But just as the porter spoke the voice of the robber knight was heard in loud and angry tones:

"Hallo! Within there, thou creeping porter. What is the answer of thy mistress? Will she give up the golden calves or must we take them?"

"Oh, noble sire," spoke the old porter, trembling from head to foot, "only last week Sir Otto and his crew robbed the Convent of St. Mary, of Barbroun, carried off all the gold and silver, and killed four armed peasants who had come up to help to defend the place!"

"Say ye so? Then, i' faith, we'll send them off howling now. Where is there a loop hole through which I can count the villains?"

The porter led the way to the small wicket in which there was a square piece of chain netting. Through this the Black Knight could count the robbers. There were two knights and fourteen men-at-arms—the latter on foot, and armed with cross-bows and swords, and wearing the usual armor of the foot soldiers of the period—round shell-caps of iron, with deep capes behind; cuirasses of brass, with a joint at the neck, thus supplying the place of a gorget; brassets or cuisses of the same, and short looking follows, and from what our hero could see of their faces he would have judged them to be just fit for some such work. Sir Otto was a stout, powerful man, and as he now wore his visor up the crusader could see that he had a bold, bad look. The other knight, the porter said, was Sir John Von Mainhardt; and that knight our crusaders knew had been placed under the ban of the empire for his evil deeds, but particularly for having robbed the Archbishop of Mayence.

"Call out your men," said the Unknown, "and have them arranged in the court here to be ready for any who may chance to dodge in. Now, Sir Engelbert, we will out upon them, while Robert and Bernard follow to scatter the hirelings."

Thus speaking the Black Knight closed his visor, and having loosened his axe and couched his lance, he called upon the porter to throw back the gate. As the way was thus opened, six of the men-at-arms were seen bringing up a heavy log with which they meant to batter down the wicket. The movement of Sir Otto and his companion, when they beheld this unexpected presence, was one of astonishment; but ere they could betray much emotion, our hero spoke:

"Who are you that dares question Otto of Metzinger?" the robber retorted. "Just stand where you are and I'll ride thee down as I would a praying nun."

As Sir Otto spoke, he gathered up his rein, and put spurs to his horse; and with his impious battle cry of, "the spoils to the mighty," he dashed on.

"God and St. Fulvia!" shouted the Unknown, as he braced himself for the shock. He did not move from the place where he stood. He only a keen eye upon the robber, and set his lance for the guard. He felt the power of a giant in his good right arm, and full well he knew that the oncoming knight only rushed upon defeat. He had received too many charges to miss his mark now; and even his horse had been so thoroughly trained that a single word was sufficient for its guidance.

With a firm hand the Black Eagle held his lance, and as the robber came dashing upon him, a quickly-spoken word caused his horse to leap upon one side, and at the same moment his lance, with a movement almost imperceptible, turned the point of the robber's weapon over the right shoulder, while the steel head of his own spear caught Sir Otto's helm just below the visor and rolled him from his horse upon the ground. Almost at the same moment Sir John von Mainhardt fell beneath the stroke of Engelbert.

The Unknown leaped from his saddle, and placed his sword at the throat of the fallen knight.

"Now, yield thee, recreant knight!"

"But to whom?" asked Otto, in struggling tones.

"To the Black Eagle of Palestine!" shouted our hero.

"Mercy!" gasped the vanquished man. "Why didn't you tell me so?"

"But do you yield?"

"Yes!"

"And if I spare thee, will thou give me thine oath that thou wilt not trouble this place again?"

"The terms are hard."

"But is not life valuable? Remember—I would kill thee as quickly as I would any other robber!"

"Spare me! I promise."

"Then upon thy knees and take the oath. That is the ordeal."

Sir Otto hesitated a while, but at length he got upon his knees, and with the cross of the crusader's sword before him, he took the prescribed oath.

"Well done! Sir Otto von Metzinger. Now call thy robber crew off, and go in search of some more legitimate game."

In the meantime the two esquires had been doing a heavy work among the men-at-arms. Robert of Swingenhoffen was like a wild bull among them, while Bernard stalked about like a stork among frogs. Their long experience against the Saracens had given them notions of combat of which their huddling adversaries knew nothing. Three of the robber-retainers were slain outright, while most of the others were either senseless upon the ground or crawling away with cracked and aching heads.

Sir John von Mainhardt, as soon as he knew who his captor was, steadily took the same oath that his companion had taken, and then they were allowed to depart; though ere they did so the latter poured out his enmity and threats profusely.

"By the holy host, Sir Crusaders, you have ventured into a nest of hornets, as you shall find to your cost. If you get out of these mountains with a whole skin you'll be fortunate!"

With this threat upon his lips, the robber knight turned to where his men-at-arms were searching for their senses, and ere long the whole party rode off—all save the three dead ones, their bodies being left for the monks to dispose of.

Blessings, deep and sincere, were showered upon the two crusaders when they returned to the convent; and when they heard of the oath they had made the marauders take, the abbess could not speak her gratitude.

A hearty breakfast was eaten, and after this the two knights signified their intention of departing. The storm of the previous evening had passed away, and the air of the Spring morning was fresh and fragrant.

"Do you go near Stuttgart?" the abbess asked.

"Directly thither," the Black Knight answered.

"Then you will easily reach it before dark if your horses are strong."

"Certainly."

"I have a favor to ask of thee," the abbess resumed, addressing him of the Eagle. "The Lady Agnes had been for several days watching for some friends who had promised to come and conduct her to Stuttgart, where she would go to see her cousins, Constance of Baden, and Blanche of Wurtemburg. They may not come for a long while, and if you will accept the charge I shall give her into thy keeping for safe delivery at the castle of Everhard Von Wurtemberg."

"Everhard von Wurtemburg!" repeated the Black Eagle. "The Wild Knight of Swabia?"

"Yes, Sir Crusader. He is surely the wildest knight in all Christendom, and the most jealous of restraint. Even the Emperor he sets at defiance, and claims all mankind for his foes. He is a strange being, and a cousin of mine to boot. He stands at the head of the robber knights of the empire; but yet he is a brave man, and would scorn a mean action. He would lie down and die of starvation ere he would rob a woman; and his breast he would have to the sword ere he would strike a foul blow. Be sure he will give thee a hearty welcome if you cross not his purpose. But will thou accept the charge?"

"Does the fair lady wish it?"

"She does."

"Then I accept the trust, and you may feel that you hold my life in pledge for her safety."

"I understand," returned the abbess, with a smile; and thus speaking she turned away.

Ere long Agnes von Luxemburg entered the keeping-room, all prepared for her journey; and both the knights started as they beheld her strange beauty when thus arrayed. Her riding-robe of purple velvet was bordered with gold, and the jaunty velvet cap, with its drooping ostrich plumes, cast a warm glow upon her face that was like a halo. She wore a small dagger in her girdle, and in her hand she carried a light whip. Her horse, a noble barb, with a mixture of the Arabian in its veins, manifested the utmost delight when he saw his mistress approach; and when she had been assisted to her saddle, the pleased animal capered about with unmistakable manifestations of joy.

"Now, mind you," said the abbess, once more addressing the Black Knight, "until you reach the castle of Everhard the Lady Agnes is my charge to you."

"Then the Wild Knight has some control over her," the Black Eagle said, in a tone so low that the maiden could not hear it.

A dark shade rested upon the face of the abbess, and a slight shudder passed through her frame as she replied—

"Yes—he is her guardian—made so by my brother in his last will. But I have authority now."

Once more our hero promised to watch well his charge, and then the abbess turned to her niece. There were a few sincere blessings—a kiss—a cheerful farewell—and then the party rode away.

After the lapse of several hours, as a short silence ensued, the Crusader gazed upon his fair companion with an earnest, prayerful look. She looked up and met his gaze, and a warm glow suffused her face. She knew not that he was looking upon her, or she would not have gazed up then, for her eyes were beaming with the tale of love, and she knew it. And a less interested person than herself, and one with less perception, could not have failed to see that the knight's gaze was one of pure, devoted affection.

It was a moment of strange emotions. Each had detected the other in the act of pouring out the silent language of love. The knight was the first to speak.

"Gentle lady," he said, in a tone made rich and musical by the deep feeling that sustained it, "why should two honorable people, whom fate has thrown together, hide the deepest, holiest emotions of their souls? I will not hide mine. You shall not say I could look what I dared not speak. Agnes, of Luxemburg, I love thee with the whole strength of my heart, and with the undivided power of my heart's first love. Thou art the first maiden who ever awoke the sweet whisper in my soul, and to thee I give my poor heart with all its hopes, its aspirations, and its joys. I trust I have not offended."

For some moments the fair girl gazed down upon the arching neck of her steed without speaking. She trembled violently, for there was a mighty struggle in her soul.

"Alas!" she at length uttered, raising her moistened eyes to her companion's face, "would that my love and my duty were united!"

"How, lady? Speak plainly, I beseech thee."

"Knowest thou not that my father willed that I should wed with the Count of Baden?"

"I knew he had so wished. Did he lay the command upon thee?"

"He never commanded me, Sir. His wish was always my law. When he expressed to me his desire, he knew that if it were in my power to do it, his desire would be accomplished."

"But thy love, lady?"

"Thou art the first man who ever won my young heart. See—I am frank because thou hast been."

"Bless thee, gentle Agnes—bless thee forever. Thou dost love me, then?"

"With all my heart."

"Then see: We still have ground for hope. If the Lord of Baden be an honorable man, he will not surely hold thee to a union from which love must ever be absent. He would not have such a wife if he could."

"Ah—you know him not!" said Agnes, with a slight shake of the head. "Nor do you know the man whom my father placed over me as my guardian. Alas! they have no hearts of love or sympathy."

The knight gazed upon his companion as she spoke, and when she ceased speaking he bowed his head. There was a cloud upon his brow, and his lips were compressed; yet he seemed more worked upon by some firm purpose of his own, than by any fears of the powers of others. When he again raised his head his bright eye beamed with more than ordinary meaning.

"Gentle Agnes," he said, "love me—love me well—love me as I love thee—and leave the rest to me. In this universe of good there must be power enough to overcome all evil, if it could only be properly applied; and so why may we not hope that right and justice shall triumph here?"

"My love I cannot control," thee maiden answered. "Were I never to see the again, from this hour my heart could never give up thine image—my soul could never forget this, its first holy love. As true as I live, I speak frankly and truthfully now. Were the painful clause removed; could the barrier be broken down—honorably so—I would place my hand within thine own, and be thine forever!"

The noble knight raised his hand to his cheek and brushed away a tear, and when he spoke his voice was low and sweet.

"Among the blessings of God, and standing second only to the pure faith of the tried Christian, is bright, sunny hope. Let us cling to it."

Half the afternoon had passed away, and the travelers had just entered upon a broad table of level land, when Engelbert's horse, which led the band, suddenly stopped and placed his nose to the ground; and in a moment more he raised his head and gave a wild, startling snort.

"Ah—that means that we are to meet somebody," said the Black Knight, as Agnes gazed inquiringly towards him.

For a moment an expression of fear dwelt upon the maiden's face, but it quickly passed away.

"We have nothing to fear, sweet one," the Knight resumed. "If they be robbers we have nothing to lose, and if they be not robbers they must be friends. Yet I'll don my casque and take my shield, for war sometimes comes when we least expect it."

As he thus spoke he exchanged his velvet cap for the black steel helm with its triple plume, and then sailing to his esquire, he took his shield. Just as Engelbert had made the same arrangement, a party of three knights appeared upon the opposite side of the plain, which was nearly half a mile distant. As the distance became less, an exclamation of fear dropped from Agnes' lips, and when her companion looked upon her, he found her pale and trembling.

"What is it?" he asked, eagerly.

"The Count or Baden!" she uttered.

"The Count? Which one?"

"He that rides upon the right hand—the shortest one."

"And do you know who are those other two?"

Agnes looked a few moments, and then she replied:

"Aye—they are two of the most villainous knights that ever broke knightly vows. There is Sir Frederick von Bondorf, who came from Bevaria to save his head from the law; and Sir Marco Montani, a crafty, bloody, and unscrupulous Italian. They are the Count's tools, and do his bidding for hire."

"They look like stout knights," said the Eagle, half to himself.

"And so they are," responded Agnes.

"But you tremble, dearest."

"Aye—the Count may be on his way to Saint Fulvia."

"Ha! For thee! Now I see. And why should he have come? Think you Everhard sent him?"

The maiden pondered a few moments ere she replied, and during her hesitation the Knight stopped.

"I'll tell thee all in a few words," she at length said, "and thus save thy questions. My guardian will do much for the Count of Baden. He would not for worlds directly do a deed to harm me; yet he looks upon my marriage with the Count as a fixed fact, and he will help it on. Thrice have I refused to go to Baden's stout castle of Heidelberg, and Rudolf has sworn that he would take me to his castle by force, if I would not go otherwise. The last time I saw my guardian he told me, in a laughing mood—he laughs because he thinks my coyness of the Count is only the result of whim; he does not know that I despise him—he told me to beware of Rudolf of Baden, for that he meant to kidnap me on the first opportunity. So I think he has come now for that purpose."

The new-comers were now within a few rods, and as the Count of Baden recognized Agnes, he put spurs to his horse. As he did so the Unknown dropped his vizor and secretly loosened the strapping of his heavy battle-axe. He of Baden was in full armor, only he wore his vizor up.

"Ha—my little truant!" the Count cried, as he drew up a few paces from the group, "I have found thee most opportunely. I was after thee, sweet one."

With a powerful effort Agnes overcame the tumultuous emotions that shook her frame, and then in a respectful manner she replied,—

"I am on my way to Stuttgart. I am going to the castle of my guardian's friend."

"So you meant when you started. I saw the noble Count, thy guardian, this morning, and he bade me come and take thee. And so you see I have come. Sir Knight, I will relieve thee of thy charge."

"Were I anxious to give up my charge I might thank thee for thy kindness," returned our hero, calmly and modestly. "But as I assumed the charge for a specified purpose, I must do my pledge. Still, you will allow me to thank you all the same."

The young Count was at first puzzled by this. He was young for the place of power he occupied, being not yet thirty; but he had had much experience, and was accounted one of the best and surest lances in Baden.

Before he could answer, however, their attention was called in another direction, where two more knights had appeared upon the field. Agnes of Luxemburg drew a long, painful breath, and her cheek once more blanched with fear, for in the two horsemen who had thus made their appearance she recognized Sir Otto of Metzinger, and John of Mainhardt. She knew that their souls were full of revenge against her noble lover; and is it a wonder that she trembled with the thought of her two faithful friends meeting these five full-armed knights? Her heart sank within her as the conviction came that she must now go with the hated Count von Baden!

But will the renowned Knight of the Eagle tamely yield her up, while the fire of his young first love is so fiercely burning in his valorous heart? "Will he fight against such fearful odds?" asks Agnes of her trembling heart; and—"What if he should be overwhelmed and slain at my feet?" Yes—he will fight! She reads his determination in his flashing eye, and imperial bearing. Short is the angry parley. The vizors are drawn down; the lances are couched, and the opposing battle-cries ring out upon the startled air! Agnes can only pray God to speed the right.

NEW-YORK CITY.

New-York Historical Society.

The regular monthly meeting of the Historical Society occurred last night, as usual, in the small Chapel of the University. Hon. LUTHER BRADISH, the President, occupied the Chair. The attendance of members was large. In the course of the routine business, several important accessions to the archives of the Society were announced as having been made in the interval since the last regular meeting.

Among these was an admirable photograph of the Old Brick Church, now undergoing demolition, from HORATIO S. BROWN, Esq.; a volume of records appertaining to the early history of South Carolina, beautifully printed (at the expense of the compiler, PLOWDEN CHARLES GENET WESTON, of Plowden, near Hagley, S. C.) and bearing the imprint of the Chiswick Press, England; and a Life, in Italian, of CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS, by his only living representative, which was received from Rev. Dr. ADAMS, and to the merit of which Mr. CASS, the American Minister at Rome, amply certified in a letter addressed to the donor.

Mr. MOORE, the Librarian, further announced that Mr. JOHN G. SHEA, a member of the Society, was engaged in the preparation of a series of volumes descriptive of the early French missions in this country, and of which only a hundred copies of each would be printed. The volume containing the history of the missions in Illinois was, he said, already completed, and ready for delivery to such members as desired to purchase it.

Mr. AUGUSTUS SCHELL, the Chairman of the Executive Committee, stated that the new volume of the Society's publications was now published, and for sale to members. A donation of $100, from Mr. CLEMENTS, for the building fund, was acknowledged with applause.

On motion of Mr. GEO. BANCROFT, Mr WESTON and Prof. WM. JAS. RIVERS, (the latter of whom, he said, had prepared a most elaborate, carefully written and trustworthy history of the first period of the colonial history of South Carolina,) were elected corresponding members, nem. con.

In compliance with the suggestion of Mr. STRONG, Rev. STEPHEN H. TYNG and Rev. Dr. ANTHON were elected life members of the society on the strength of a contribution of $300 by a lady, which was presented through Mr. STRONG with a request to that effect.

Professor HORACE GREEN read the paper of the evening, viz: A compilation from private sources of personal reminiscences of the battle of Bunker's Hill and of the gallant services rendered to the patriotic colonists during the Revolutionary struggle, by the minute-men of Massachusetts. The Professor read several interesting excerpts from an order book kept by a relative in the Continental Army for a period of several months both before and after the battle of Bunker's Hill.

Among them was the following "petition" of a Mr. THOMAS DRAPER:

To His Excellency, Gen. PUTNAM. Sir: I beg the favor of a detachment of 43 men, as an advance party to go to Alton's Point, in order to take some Torys;—then to bring them up in the rear, and go in at the South end of Boston and there blow up the Magazine. I want orders whether to shoot the King's troops or not.

As illustrations both of the strict moral discipline of the patriotic forces and of their poverty Mr. Green read two extracts from the order book, one of which, dated June 14, 1745, just three days before the battle, directed the officers, in addition to other things, to stave every whisky barrel they could lay hands on, and the other of which recorded the decree that the officers should distinguish themselves from the private troops by wearing pieces of blue ribbon in their hats or button-holes. The assertion that Charleston was burned by the Royal forces because they were galled by the fire which was kept up from it was met and refuted, and the fact that the Americans failed to be the victors only for want of ammunition was clearly shown from cotemporary evidence. On motion of Prof GREENE a vote of thanks was unanimously accorded to the learned gentleman who had supplied the paper for the evening.

Dr. BACON then read a brief paper on the nomenclature of the counties of New-York. He showed that the counties were named after the titles of members of the Royal family, by marriage or consanguinity, at the time when CHARLES the Second conferred the proprietory government of the Province on his brother, the Duke of YORK, who subsequently succeeded him on the British Throne, with the title of JAMES the Second.

RELIEF OF BROADWAY.

The Mechanics' Club held their usual meeting on Wednesday evening, Mr. TILLMAN in the Chair.

During the preliminary hour devoted to miscellaneous matters a specimen of early wood carving in high preservation was exhibited by Mr. ELLINGER, a foreign bookseller in this City. The work is a crucifix, elaborately ornamented with figures, a fragment of the best age of the art, probably of the time of BENVENUTO CELLINI. At the back are enclosed relics of eighteen of the saints; these are inlaid with pearls. Of course, its merits as a work of art form its principal attraction.

A new and ingenious corn-planter was exhibited; also, a curious contrivance for extinguishing fires, the latter by a colored gentleman from Philadelphia, Mr. AARON ROBERTS. The insurance companies in New-York approve of its use, in narrow streets especially. The instrument resembles a gilding telescope, through which five engines may force water, the slides being raised without any ladder—managed entirely from below. On a steamboat on fire it may be applied laterally.

The subject of the evening was, "the best mechanical means of relieving Broadway."

Mr. FISHER alluded to the two plans before the public—the rail, as advocated by Mr. LEONARD, and the plan of the City Government. Mr. FISHER spoke strongly in favor of iron pavements. He suggested the use of the space in front of the City Hall as a place where the experiment might be fairly tried. Pavements that will allow water to descend and mud to exude will always allow horses to slip. Mr. FISHER did not approve of the substitution of Belgian pavement for Russ, that is, unless the concrete foundation be retained. He is of opinion that diversion of traffic into lateral avenues is not necessary until better facilities are afforded in Broadway.

The Secretary alluded to what was done in the laying out of the City by RUTHERFORD. That ancient authority went in for broad avenues.

A member suggested the possibility of tunnelling.

Mr. TILLMAN reviewed the various propositions. New avenues would, of course, relieve the City. The proposition of Mr. FISHER (the iron pavement) ought to be tried in the side streets. A Committee might be appointed to ascertain the amount of traction on various kinds of pavement, including that of smooth iron. As to tunnelling, that might be tried at Exchange place. Mr. GOODWIN thought that want of due regulations and the system of packing increased the crowd in the stages. Mr. BUTLER said that better municipal regulations were needed, as well as their stricter enforcement. It was the cross freight travel that made the crowd. How absurd it was to allow steamers to lay down thousands of tons of goods down town, and then send crowds of carts to carry them to the neighborhood, perhaps, of Canal-street.

On motion, the Committee on "Traction" was then appointed by the Chairman, who, in conjunction with two other gentlemen, will report. A motion was carried to advise the Institute to appropriate $200 for experiments on "traction" on street pavements, which was given as the subject for the next evening.

Farmers' Club—American Institute.

The Farmers' Club met on Tuesday at their rooms on Broadway, Judge LIVINGSTONE in the Chair

The Secretary, Judge MEIGS, occupied the first hour in reading valuable extracts from the European journals. After which, LEONARD WRAY, Esq., entered into elaborate details as to his acquaintance with the cultivation of the Sorghum plant at the Cape of Good Hope, in France, and in other parts of the world. From all which the conclusion was, that sugar might be as economically produced from it, even in the latitude of Canada, as from the sugar cane.

Mr. AVERETT DU VILLE exhibited a machine for shelling corn. It was too large for admission into the room, but was examined by a Committee, who were deputed to proceed to the place containing it. They will report at the next meeting.

A Member, in reference to the Sorghum, informed the Club that the matter would soon be decided. At Philadelphia, in the course of the next season, the plant will be taken from hot houses and cultivated in the open air on a large scale. The projectors are extremely sanguine of profitable investment.

The subject of the day was then taken up: "Liquid Manures." Whereupon Professor MAPES occupied perhaps too much time in the repetition of his oft-uttered and favorite dogma, as to the fact that chemical or earthy elements that have already passed through the bodies of animals or plants, form more useful manure than the same quantity of the same material taken from the rock.

Mr. WRAY (whose observations on the Sorghum had been heard with so much attention) alluded to the value of the application of various mineral manures. He did not think "potash" was sufficiently appreciated. If potash be taken from the soil faster than it can be restored, there will be a corresponding want of fertility.

Professor MAPES again adverted to his favorite position. He said that on strictly limestone soils (as in Dutchess County) it was found useful to lay on an additional quantity of lime. But that kind of calcareous matter was found to be best which had been already transmitted through vegetable and animal forms. The doctrine of Isomerism was a true one.

Dr. WATERBURY said, that certainly no substance or nutriment could enter the body of an animal or plant, unless in a state of solution.

Professor MAPES proceeded to argue for and illustrate the doctrine of Isomerism. The lime of burnt bones was more valuable to the land than the same quantity of lime from the rock.

The hour of adjournment having arrived, the argument as to "animal progression" and assimilation" ended as it began, the conclusion being that nothing was concluded. Dr. WATERBURY was prevented from replying to Professor MAPES, Mr. ROBINSON censuring both parties for entering into discussion, which, he maintained, was always interdicted.

Board of Councilmen.

The Board of Councilmen met on Wednesday. The President, J. N. PHILLIPS, Esq., in the Chair.

STREET-CLEANING.

A resolution was offered by Councilman REILLY to direct the Comptroller not to pay money on any contracts not confirmed by the Common Council. The motion to adopt was seconded by Councilman WARNER.

Councilman OTTARSON inquired what particular contracts were aimed at, but the mover declined specifying. Mr. OTTARSON said the case was perfectly clear; it was just what he expected; the object was to break up the new contracts for cleaning the streets, and go back to the mud and dirt and robbery that have so long disgraced the City. He hoped members would not sanction such a movement, although, even if they did, he presumed the contractors would go on. They had their contracts under the Charter, and no ordinance of the Council, past, present, or prospective, could effect them if they fulfilled their bargain. The Charter says, all work to be done for the City exceeding $250 shall be given to the lowest bidder who produces adequate security. No confirmation is required; no head of a Department can refuse to give the work to the lowest bidder, and any attempt to deprive such a bidder of his contract would end in giving him heavy damages at the close of a long suit at law. But he hoped these new street contracts would be confirmed, and that the men who have already done so much to clean the City, would have the support and encouragement of the authorities as well as the City. They had already written authority signed by the Mayor, Comptroller, and Commissioner of Streets and Lamps, to go on, with the assurance of those high officers that they should be paid—and they would be paid, whatever this Board might say. He was astonished, after all that the members had seen and heard of dirty streets, to find any one so bold as to attempt to stop so important a work. It would be an outrage on the people, who are just congratulating themselves upon the prospects of decency once more in the condition of the streets. The very thing the contractors aimed at had already met serious difficulties; but they are acting in good faith; they are hecked by the most respectable and responsible men in the City, and if not prevented will no doubt faithfully fulfill the mighty task they have undertaken.

Councilman WARNER, frequently interrupting, contended for the right of the Common Council to examine and decide upon all contracts.

Councilman OTTARSON conceded the propriety of knowing if contracts are properly made, but if they are, he reiterated that they were law in spite of the Common Council—law by the express terms of the Charter.

Councilman HASWELL moved that the resolution be referred to the Law Committee, to inquire into the rights and privileges of the Common Council.

The motion was seconded by Mr. OTTARSON, and unanimously adopted.

A report of the Committee on Ferries, in favor of extending the time for the completion of the ferry at foot of Thirty-eighth-street, East River, was adopted.

Five hundred dollars was agreed to be donated to the Jews' Hospital.

Adjourned to Friday at five.

New-York Typographical Society.

This Society has now been in existence nearly half a century, being instituted in the year 1809. Two of its original founders—of whom but five or six are now living—were present on Saturday, GEORGE MATHER and DAVID H. REINS, both gentlemen now upward of seventy years of age.

The premises now occupied by the Society having been tendered them at a reduced rent, they have determined to make another effort to reopen the Library permanently. A subscription was started for this purpose on Saturday evening among the members, and all connected with the typographical profession are invited to contribute. The Library contains over four thousand volumes in every department of literature.

During the term, about forty prominent literary gentlemen have been elected honorary members of the Society, and certificates of membership presented them.

Run Over and Killed.

An inquest was held yesterday by Coroner CONNERY upon the body of SAMUEL MYERS, aged four years, who was run over and killed by a stage in Columbia-street on Monday evening. The examination showed that the stage—one of the Bowery and Grand-street line—was being driven slowly at the time of the accident, and that the boy ran directly in front of the stage, and so near to it that the driver could not hold up in time to save him. A verdict embodying these facts was rendered by the jury, whereupon JESSE KELLEY, the driver of the stage, was released from arrest.

THE WORLD HAS GROWN WISER,
And we, of course, shall grow wiser also as we increase our years and increase our experience. But do we? We change our food, we change the fashion of our garments, we improve the character of our dwellings, we alter the style of our furniture, we amend every year the very laws and constitutions under which we politically live, so as to adapt them in all things to those natural variations which, in obedience to the decree of Providence, overcomes the entire universe, from the vibrations of a pendulum to the perturbations of a planet. We change everything except our physics! The science of medicine stands now just where it did a thousand years ago! Amidst all other mutations it, alone, has remained stagnant, unsubjected to the spirit of progression and uninfluenced by the activity of the age. The Faculty have so willed it. They fear innovation, and so oppose it. They prefer to kill under the musty old precedents of their defunct grandfathers, rather than to cure under the empirical lights of experience and advanced civilization. Their is one physician in our midst, however, who clings to no such antiquated and obsolete system, and that is Dr. HENRY ANDERS. He is determined not so much to make money, as to raise up around him a host of living witnesses to his originality, skill and disinterestedness. Let those who doubt, try his extraordinary Liquid Iodine, or only successful solution of that powerful element in pure water. It is a marvelous remedy for consumption, scrofula, rheumatism, fever and ague, palsy, heart disease and liver complaints, as well as all maladies arising from a depraved state of the blood or the misuse of mercury. It may confidently be relied upon.

Williamsburg Literary Associations.

The Young People's Literary Association of the Reformed Dutch Church, under the care of Rev. E. S. PORTER, gave their first public entertainment on Monday evening. Despite the storm, a large audience were present. Some very fine vocal music was given by the members, an address was delivered by Dr. VERMILYEA, and prizes were awarded to the male and female writers of the best essays. The Association was organized last Fall, meeting weekly, and has been very successful in its operations. Williamsburg is coming to be a place of some literary pretensions. Some of the gentlemen have formed a "Young Men's Debating Society," and the ladies, not to be outdone, have founded a pet "Alpha," which they mean shall be something more than a beginning. The Greenpointers, also, have a flourishing Literary Association, which is very popular in that region.

NEW-JERSEY.

Church Dedication.

The new edifice of the First Reformed Dutch Church of Jersey City, situated on the site of the old edifice in Grand-street, between Washington and Warren streets, was dedicated Monday. The dedicatory discourse delivered at the morning service was preached by the new pastor, Rev. Dr. RIDDLE, from the text "How amiable are thy tabernacles, O Lord." In the afternoon Rev. Dr. VERMILYEA, of New-York, delivered a sermon, and in the evening Rev. Dr. FERRIS, Chancellor of the New-York University, occupied the pulpit.

The construction of this edifice was commenced four years ago, and has been steadily continued except during an interval of about a year and a half until this time. It has cost $36,000, and is the most expensive Church in Jersey City. It was at first designed to construct a Church for about $20,000, but when that amount had been expended upon the plans of the architect first employed, only the outer walls had been created. Litigation ensued between the architect and his employers which is not yet decided. After a lapse of eighteen months more funds were raised, and a new architect, Mr. M. LINEAU, of Jersey City, was engaged, and the building has been completed so far as to be occupied. The towers are not carried up to their intended height, the basement has not been finished, and there remains ornamental work to be done—all of which will cost about $5,000.

The Church is 106 feet in length, from front to rear, and 70 in width. It is built of brown sand-stone from Bellville and Little Falls, N. J. Its architectural style is perpendicular Gothic of the Twelfth Century. The work is massive and substantial. The nave, extending the length of the Church, is 48 feet high and 30 feet wide. The dove story is supported by ten arches, resting upon eight massive columns, and is lighted by ten windows. The roof of the Church is open-timbered. The main body of the Church is lighted by eight windows at the side, one in the rear and a large window over the organ-gallery at the front end of the Church. All of the windows are of richly-stained glass. There are 128 pews in the Church, which will accommodate at least 750 persons with seats. The pulpit is at the rear of the Church, under the nave. The organ-gallery is over the vestibule. The interior walls are of a light buff color. The gas lights have been so arranged in circles about the columns as to dispense with chandeliers. The floors are carpeted and the pews cushioned with good taste and comfortably. The stone-cutting and masonry has been done by WM. BARTLE; the carpenter work by WM. POWELL; the painting by CRANHAM & WETTERSON, and gas-fitting by S. HETHERINGTON.

WEDNESDAY, April 8—P. M.

The business at the Stock Exchange to-day reached nearly 30,000 shares, at a general advance of about 1 ₱ cent. on the depressed rates of Tuesday afternoon. The recovery was resisted at the early board by further heavy sales of the principal road stocks, both for cash and on contract. But in the afternoon the orders for Reading, Erie, and one or two other prominent descriptions, improved the tone of the market, and caused the whole list to leave off firm at the advance just noticed.

The Money Market gradually but surely improves, and the amount of means seeking temporary employment is on the increase. Most of the Stock and Domestic Exchange firms to-day report the supply quite easy. Discounts are 8½@9 ₱ cent. for prime paper, 90 days to 6 months; 10@12 ₱ cent. for fair names; 8 ₱ cent. for very short prime acceptances. At Bank, the applications this week are less pressing. The Sub-Treasury received to-day $193,023; paid out $160,091; and held at the close, $15,122,133. The next steamer for Europe is the Alps, on Saturday, sailing for Liverpool, taking the Collins day. The Atlantic not yet ready for sea.

The Board of Directors of the New-York and Erie Railroad declared a scrip dividend of 10 ₱ cent. on the Capital Stock of the Company, payable 27th of April, is the shares of the Company, substituted for $1,000,000 of the Bonds of 1875, bought in for the account of the Stockholders under the Sinking Fund arrangement of February 1, 1855. The transfer-books will close on the 15th, and reopen on the 27th. This is the first of the Sinking Fund dividends under the programme of 1855, the original tenor of which was that the subsequent divisions should be for one million each. But, under a recent modification, informally agreed upon by the Board, a second dividend of half a million will follow in April of next year. The Bonds of 1875, at present held in the United States Trust Company for account of the Stocks holders, amount to $1,094,500, or $94,500 in excess of the sum now to be divided.

The Land Sales by the Illinois Central Company, for the month of March, amounted to $498,325, or 35,353 acres. The particulars are:

At a meeting of the Directors of the Metropolitan Bank, held yesterday, JOHN EARL WILLIAMS, lately Vice-President, was elected President, vice Mr. MCCALL, who declined a reelection, and Mr. GEO. J. SENET, Cashier, vice Mr. MEIGS, resigned.

The Burlington and Missouri Railroad, from the Mississippi River at Burlington, Iowa through the southern tier of counties of the State of Iowa to the Missouri River at the mouth of the Platte, is one of the new Western lines recently favored by Congress with a grant of the public lands to the extent of about 400,000 acres. The line is to be 280 miles in length. The eastern section of 35 miles was built and opened without aid from the land grant. The remaining sections have just been taken in hand by a wealthy and well-known party of railroad men in Boston, Albany, Detroit, and Chicago—the same who are heavily interested in the Boston and Western, New-York Cental, Michigan Central, and Chicago and Burlington lines. The new work is practically an extension of their interest through the State of Iowa to the new Territory of Kansas. A cash stock subscription of $500,000 at par has given these parties the control of the direction. The preëxisting debt on the eastern section is $350,000 First Mortgage 8 ₱ Cent. Convertible Bonds, at the rate of $10,000 a mile. These were negotiated in this market early last season at 85

The Peoria and Burlington and the Logansport and Peoria interests are also benefited by this arrangement. The latter has its eastern connection with the Toledo and Wabash Valley line at Logansport.

Germany.

The German Powers decline the intervention of the great powers in the quarrel between Denmark and the Confederation, on the ground that the question at issue is purely federal, in which they, as well as the King of Denmark, act as members of the Confederation. At the same time we are told that Russia and France are favorable to Denmark in the affair.

Austria.

The Austrian Government in recalling its representative from Turin, addressed a circular dispatch setting forth the reasons to its agents at European Courts. The Nord contains a summary, according to which the Cabinet of Vienna is not only dissatisfied with Count CAVOUR's reply to its complaints of the Piedmontese Press, and of the tolerance with which these attacks are treated by the Sardinian Government, but it sees a new offence in the language used by the Government on the occasion of the debates relative to the fortification of Alessandria.

The dispatch adds that Austria has become convinced that Piedmont seeks to place itself at the head of the revolutionary movement in Italy, a movement of which the success would be the destruction of the Austrian dominion in Italy. Piedmont pursues, then, a policy which not only tends to disturb social order in Italy, but to totally change the European political system established by the treaties of Vienna. In the presence of these facts Austria deems that her dignity will no longer permit her to maintain official relations with Sardinia.

Nevertheless, in informing foreign Courts of the step Austria has determined to take, she declares that this measure will not be followed by others of a more hostile character, and that, in any event, Austria will avoid, up to the last moment, all that can compromise the maintenance of peace, or create embarrassment among European Cabinets.

A letter from MEHEMET BEY, Gen. BANJYAS' Aide-de-camp, says the landing of the expedition was effected Feb. 23, at Taub, where the headquarters were fixed. MEHEMET brought with him 200 men for instruction in the different arms of war. He had accepted supreme command of the Circassian forces. The nobles and deputies had sworn obedience to him, and intrusted him with the Prophet's flag.

He would take the field in May.

Persia.

Insurrection had broken out in Persia, and the revolt was spreading. The insurgents in Khordistan had seized the Shah's uncle and threatened him with death unless ransomed.

Japan.

The Journal Des Debats gives the details of the reported British difficulty on the 11th of December. Two English vessels-of-war, after having visited the ports of Simoda and Hakodadi, appeared before Nangasaki, but were refused admission by the Governor. The captains, however, penetrated into port, and anchored within gun-shot of the land batteries, where they remained without hostility.

The next day they repaired with a numerous fleet to the residence of the Mandarin, who refused to receive them, but sent word that if they had any complaint to make he would forward their representations to the Imperial Court, and transmit to them the reply. The Captains wrote to Yeddo to claim the right of remaining some time at Nangasaki in conformity with the treaty. In a fortnight the Emperor's answer arrived, announcing that he had given orders for the three ports of Simodi, Hakodadi and Nangasaki to be open to the vessels of France, England and the United States. Such vessels were permitted to refit there, to take in provisions, and to trade to a certain defined extent, but the crews must not go into the interior.

There was much activity in the Discount Market, while at the Bank, in consequence of the June's absorbed there on account of the revenue at the termination of the quarter, the applications were excessively heavy and numerous. The French three per cents show a fractional improvement.

The Daily News city article, of Friday evening, says: "The Funds opened steadily this morning, but a decline of one-eighth was ultimately established owing to some considerable bona fide sales coupled with an increased demand for money in the Stock Exchange at 6 to 6½ per cent. on Consols.

VIENNA, Friday, March 27.

The Piedmontese Envoy, Marquis CANTARO DE CEVAS, who is recalled by his Government, is preparing to leave.

LONDON, Saturday Morning.

The papers this morning are almost wholly filled with election news. The Times contains thirty columns of it. At Tiverton yesterday, Lord PALMERSTON showed the impracticable character of the doctrine that officers in distant ports ought not to vindicate our rights without previously referring home for instructions. "Suppose," he said, "that the Chinese had taken a dozen British merchants and threatened to starve them if they did not do something which they had no right to be called upon to do. Was our Admiral, was our superintendent to leave these men in prison till they could write home the news to England and ask whether they should take steps to relieve them? Why, before the orders of the Government reached China those men would have ceased to exist, and the answer of the Commissioner to our act would be: "I am sorry to inform you that three months ago these men died from their sufferings." [Cheers.]

Lord PALMERSTON afterwards adverted to the recent Chinese motion and debate, and expressed surprise that experienced members should have allowed themselves to believe that they were only acting the part of jurymen, whose duty it was to decide a fact which had taken place at the other end of the globe, and that the result of the vote was not to have any practical effect on our domestic affairs."

If the House of Commons was setting as a jury upon Sir JOHN BOWRING—and who ever heard of a jury proceeding to try a man 18,000 miles off, without having had an opportunity of instructing counsel to defend him. The adverse party notions, with a view of overturning a Government, were in accordance with our political constitutions, but such parties should first see their way to form themselves an efficient administration, and, if they did see their way, they should propose a vote of no confidence in the Government of the day; but it was not fair to take as a trial of strength a question on which one party is to be arrayed in hostility to the honor, the interests, and the dignity of the country, and the other is called upon to maintain that honor, to watch those interests, and to sustain that dignity. Such was the nature of the question on which the late division took place. His Lordship, in alluding to the question of Parliamentary reform, on which some persons expected the Government to give distinct pledges, said it would be unbecoming to do so.

Against the other electoral incidents yesterday are the loss of seats by Mr. T. CHAMBERS, Mr. FERGUSON and Mr. S. RICARDS. To-day's proceedings will, however, surpass in interest those of yesterday, as the contests for Manchester, Huddersfield and Sheffield, and about one hundred other places, takes place.

INTERESTING FROM ALBANY.

The Amount of Business Done by the Legislature---The Coming Adjournment---Report of the Committee on the Dred Scott Decision---The New-York Bills, &c.

Correspondence of the New-York Daily Times.

ALBANY, Wednesday, April 8, 1857.

I have been looking over the "Introduction Book" this morning. How many "little bills do you imagine have been sent up to the Speaker's desk since the people of the State of New-York first came to the Senate and Assembly? No less than 838 in the House, and 434 in the Senate. As near as can be ascertained, something more than half of these bills have passed the respective Houses in which they were introduced—the rest are mostly ordered to a third reading, and I think the mass of them will be considered before a final adjournment is made.

When will that adjournment be? Why, I think within forty-eight hours after the expiration of the one hundred days for which pay is provided. There are a vast number of important bills of a general character yet unacted on in both Houses, and to these must be added the local bills, which, though of little account to the State at large, in reality make up the sum of the wishes and necessities of the members. Many a useful member of the Legislature has lost his reelection because of his failure to have enacted some law which, though trifling in its character, was of unlimited importance to his constituents. This ought not to be. The bills of minor importance ought not every year to be crowded over, or neglected, because of the pressure for general legislation. Members should insist upon final action on their home measures, before they consent to take up general topics, and they should be willing to remain until the mass of their associates have secured the action they deem essential.

The temperance question was discussed at length yesterday afternoon in the House, on the bill for a license system which came down from the Senate. No conclusions were reached, progress being reported by the Committee, and leave granted that it should have another pow-wow over its various provisions, as well as over the question of prohibition generally.

No other business of general importance was transacted in the House last evening. This morning the bill to provide for the appointment of Commissioners to look after the poor-houses and charitable institutions of the State was discussed in Committee of the Whole at great length, the general tendency being manifestly in opposition to the establishment of any such Commission. The enacting clause was struck out.

I send the full report of the Select Committee of the Senate and Assembly, appointed to consider the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of DRED SCOTT. The report and the resolutions are very satisfactory and spirited. They ring out pure and clear, and will command the attention and the approval of the people of the State of New-York. I regret that the proposed law stops somewhat short of the goal which the people of the State should reach as speedily as possible—that is, full, explicit and determined hostility to any recognition of the existence of Slavery, in any shape or form whatever.

The Trinity Church bill—as it passed the Senate—was before the House Committee yesterday afternoon. SAMUEL B. RUGGLES made a lengthy argument in opposition to the bill, but I think he produced little effect on the Committee. At present there appears little doubt that the bill will pass the House by an overwhelming vote—say at least Ayes 80.

The New-York Charter was read a third time in the Senate this morning, and passed by Ayes 25—being every member who voted. At least four Senators were absent, who would, if they had been present, have voted for the bill. During its reading, Mr. SICKLES interrupted, with a suggestion that the term of office of the Mayor should be retained. Mr. BROOKS seemed to think it rather an extravagant stretch of magnanimity on the part of Mr. SICKLES, to thus stand for FERNANDO the First, after the treatment he had received from that individual. Mr. SICKLES answered: "Those are private griefs."

Mr. BROOKS—I merely state it to show that this is a display of magnanimity, illustrating the old text—"when one cheek is smitten turn the other."

Mr. SICKLES—It is to return good for evil, and is consistent with my position on the church question.

After this little outburst of magnanimous forbearance, is it to be wondered at that the Charter received a unanimous vote?

The Charter, as it passes the Senate, still carries some of the incongruities which have made the existing Charter so obnoxious.

The bill to establish bulkhead and Pier Lines for the harbor at New-York was also read a third time in the Senate and passed.

Also, the bill to establish regulations for the port of New-York—of which I send you a copy. It should be published in full, as it will undoubtedly pass the House without amendment.

The Police bill has been reported complete, and will probably come up for a third reading to-morrow. There appears to be no doubt of its passage.

The Central Park bill is also to a third reading in the Senate.

The City Hall and Supervisors' bills will be reported complete for a third reading this evening, in the House.

The whirl of business here exceeds almost anything that I have ever before witnessed. The number of bills yet remaining to be acted on is so large that every one is pushing, hauling, driving and crowding to get precedence. In the general mêlée, it seems impossible almost to determine the right from left. In fact I should not wonder if in the end the right should be left—over.

There is a crowd of anxious faces here—anxious to serve the people in the various places at the disposal of the Governor and Senate. The pressure is unprecedented, the average of applicants being 30 for every office to be filled.

It is said Governor KING has determined to make out an entire new state of Harbor Masters; that he will also refuse every application that does not come from a resident of the City of New-York or Brooklyn.

To-morrow is regular Executive Session day. It is an even bet that the nominations are or are not made. Five minutes ago I thought they were going in sure—now, I don't think they will—in five minutes more I shall have another opinion. I know this is more latitude of opinion than your indefatigable correspondent ought to assume—but at this late period it is so much easier to change your mind than it is to investigate, that I feel justified in adapting my opinions to the rumors of the moment. LEO.

Mr. FOOT presented the report of the Joint Committee on the Dred Scott case, with resolutions and a bill. The report is lengthy.

The joint resolutions are as follows:

Resolved, That the State will not allow Slavery within its borders in any form or under any pretence, for any time, however short, let the consequences be what they may.

Resolved, That the Supreme Court of the United States, by reason of a decision of the majority of its Judges, having identified itself with a sectional and aggressive party, it has lost the confidence and respect of the people of this State.

Resolved, That the Governor be requested to transmit a copy of the report and bill and the resolutions to the respective journals of the States of the Union.

The bill provides, in section 1, that no descent, near or remote, from an African, whether slave or free, of any color, shall prevent any person from becoming a citizen of this State, nor deprive him of the rights of citizenship.

Section 2 provides that every slave brought into this State involuntarily or by consent of the owner shall be free.

Section 3 makes it felony to hold as a slave, under any circumstances or for any time, in this State, any person mentioned in the second section, and punishes the same by imprisonment for not less than two years nor more than ten.

The report and resolutions were tabled, and the bill referred to the Committee of the Whole.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Mr. FROST moved for a reconsideration of the vote on the bill for the relief of Broadway, New-York. Ruled out of order.

The Assembly Apportionment bill was then taken up in Committee of the Whole and ordered to a third reading.

The Senate Apportionment bill was also ordered to a third reading.

The bill reorganizing the Board of Port Wardens in the port of New-York, was again taken up, and after an amendment, providing that at least three nautical men shall be appointed as Wardens, was read a third time and passed.

The International Bridge bill was debated in Committee of the Whole and progress reported.

The House was then occupied for the remainder of the session in perfecting the Appropriation Bill of 1857.

Nicaraguan Affairs---The Recent Letters.

A communication in your paper of this morning, signed "K. ROMAN," manifestly written by some one inimical to Nicaragua, contains, among other erroneous statements, the following:

"The Orizaba left San Juan del Sur on the 18th, where neither the United States Consul, Mr. PARKER, nor any of the inhabitants, had heard any tidings about a battle on the 16th, nor had any accounts of such battle been published, or even whispered at Panama, on or after the arrival there of the Orizaba."

The Orizaba left San Juan del Sur on the 20th March, and not on the 18th, as this writer states; and all the accounts of the battles published, prior to the publication of Gen. HENNINGSEN's letters in the Herald, were founded upon the reports brought by the Orizaba to Panama. That writer also says:

"Two letters have been published, from General HENNINGSEN, in the New-York Herald, dated March 19. The General says the battle took place on the 16th."

If he had really read Gen. HENNINGSEN's letters published in the Herald, it is difficult to imagine how he could have made such a statement.

The following is an extract from one of his letters so published:

"RIVAS, Thursday, March 19, 1857.

"* * * will show you my letters to her, giving a full account of our victory won on the day before yesterday. We had ten hour's fighting. We attacked San Jorge by a cannonade, and drove the allies out of the town. At nightfall we suspended our fire, and the enemy being reinforced ventured to attack us in a hollow in the road near the town."

The writer, who signs himself "K. ROMAN," then says:

"Immediately following General HENNINGSEN's letter is another, 'from an officer with General WALKER to a friend in this City,' dated Rivas, March 18. It does not tally as to dates, with HENNINGSEN's, for he says the battle was fought on the 17th, and not on the 16th, as the General alleges."

The "officer's" letter does tally exactly with General HENNINGSEN's letters. Both state the 17th as the day of the battle of which they speak, and neither refer to a battle on the 16th. It may be, there was another victory on the 17th, and if so, it is not doubted that General HENNINGSEN gave an account of it in his letter of the 18th, which was doubtless intercepted in its passage from San Juan del Sur. If Mr. K. ROMAN has seen such letter, information should be furnished, and the letter delivered to its rightful owner. These errors of K. ROMAN being rectified, it is unnecessary to notice the unfounded deductions and conclusions he makes, so calumnious of Generals WALKER and HENNINGSEN. H.

Aid for Nicaragua---Rendezvous at Charleston.

The Memphis Eagle and Enquirer publishes the following extract of a letter from Colonel KEWEN to a gentleman of that City, dated Washington, March 5, 1857:

DEAR SIR:—In consequence of the withdrawal of GARRISON, MORGAN & Co., of the steamer Texas, from the New-Orleans trade, it was rendered necessary that I should visit New-York and make some arrangements relative to the transportation of emigrants from Southern ports. I arrived here from New-York this morning, having succeeded in effecting what I conceived to be a satisfactory arrangement. I proposed to the above named gentlemen to raise in Charleston, Savannah, and adjacent cities, from 500 to 1,000 men, if the means of transportation were furnished them from the city of Charleston. They have agreed to furnish me with a steamer at that port for the conveyance of reinforcements, and in a few days I shall establish my head-quarters at that place. I design raising the requisite number of men and accompany them myself to the scene of action. In establishing a rendezvous at Charleston, it is essential that I should be provided with all the means necessary to the arming and equipping of a large body of men. I desire to go in force sufficient to strike a decisive blow and put an end to the war. The recent cowardice of TITUS—a thing almost incredible—has determined me to take the matter in hand myself, and I so advised Gen. WALKER by the steamer of the 23d, from New-York. I have urged, too, upon JAS. WALKER, Esq., of Nashville, the necessity of making every exertion possible to further the prosecution of my purpose. Now is the critical time of our fortunes, and it must and shall result favorably. The funds raised in Nashville I have advised him to remit to me forthwith at Charleston, that I may be enabled to commence operations in earnest. I desire, also, that you will do the same. I trust, really, that you have been successful in obtaining from the citizens of Memphis evidence of a liberal and just appreciation of the struggle in which we are engaged, and of the social and political consequences it involves. Look to Tennessee for "material aid," as well as sympathy for its gallant son, and I should blush to know and feel that it had proved faithless to its high and holy obligations.

Yours truly, F. T. C. KEWEN.

SUDDEN AND SINGULAR DEATH.—P. ROGAN died suddenly yesterday after a great deal of intense suffering. It is thought that he was poisoned on Thursday last by handling hides. It is supposed that while handling the hides he rubbed a pimple on his face in such a manner as to get the poison into the circulation. He was not seriously ill till Saturday, when the pimple commenced swelling very rapidly. It soon extended to his whole head, and then descended to his body as far down as the waist. At the time of his death his head was as large as a half bushel, while his features were so distorted that his most intimate friends could not recognize him. The death of Mr. ROGAN has led to two opinions—one is, that he died from the effects of poison, while the other is, that the matter introduced into the pimple led to erysipelas, and that to death. Mr. R. was a young man of good habits.—Albany Journal.

MARINE MATTERS.

The frigate Niagara, which has been anchored in the North River since Wednesday evening, will proceed on her trial trip (so it is stated on board) this forenoon. She will leave her anchorage about 9 o'clock. Mr. THOMAS ARDEN pilots her.

Capt. BAKER, formerly of the bark H. H. [illegible], which was lost in January last, had arrived at St. Helena on the 28th of February, in the bark White Cloud, from Cape Town. Capt B. reports off Port Dauphin Dec. 23, the bark Montgomery, CHAPMAN, of New-Bedford, which had lost her third mate and a boat's crew; the last that was seen of them they were fast to a large whale, which carried them out of reach of the ship, and they were never seen afterwards.

The bark Valletta, which arrived at Boston on Tuesday from Messina, brought as a prisoner [illegible] man named JAMES MORRIS, charged with having murdered in a quarrel DAVID SCOTT, mate of the American ship Crescent, while that vessel was lying in the port of Trieste.

The British mail steamship Europa, which sailed from Boston for Liverpool on the 6th, has recently been cut in two amidships and had 23 feet added to her length. She has also had important additions made to her interior economy, and has been strengthened by extra fastenings, diagonal iron braces, &c. She is now classed as one of the best of the Cunard steamers.

A letter to E. WALTER, from the wreck of the ship New-Hampshire, at Jones' Beach on Wednesday evening, says: "This morning we have unbent the sails, and put them on board the schooner [illegible], her crew have refused to work, and have been sent to town. The ship has twelve feet of water in her hold, two of her beams are broken. The weather was moderate yesterday morning, and anchors and chains were got ready, but it came on to blow fresh, causing a heavy sea, and all hands got frightened. The ship lays well, and there are hopes that she may be got off if the weather will permit. The schooners Rapid and Excelsior are here.

The schooner Harriet Louisa, with a load of marl, was sunk a few days since off the Jersey Highlands, and subsequently was broken to pieces during the storm. The vessel was owned by Mr. [illegible] DREW, of Bridgeport, and was valued at about $6,000. She was not insured.

Disasters to Ship Connecticut.

Extract of a letter received by ISAAC R. WOOD, Purser of Steamship Baltic. The ship Connecticut, of New-York, Captain GEORGE E. WELCH, left Cardiff (Wales,) October 28, with a cargo of coal, bound to Sydney, Australia. On the 12th November experienced a heavy gale from S. S. E., veering round to nor'west, where it remained for about six hours, blowing a perfect hurricane, and suddenly died away a calm, leaving a very high irregular sea. The ship fell off and gave two or three terrific rolls, carrying away all the stanchions, bulkheads, and all the provisions, and water secured in the upper between decks. The provisions were nearly all destroyed in consequence of the barrels being stove, and then becoming saturated with tar, varnish, and salt water. We were kindly supplied by ship St. Bernard, of Boston, also by two French ships, with enough water to last a few days. After which rigged a distiller in the passenger's galley, and made 60 gallons of pure water per day; was eventually obliged to bear up for Cape Town, Cape of Good Hope, in consequence of the provisions being unfit for use; arrived there December 31, and repaired damages; and after obtaining a fresh supply of provisions and an anchor, (having shipped one during a gale at Cardiff,) proceeded on our voyage.

BERMUDA, Saturday, March [illegible].

The ship Diregо, YOUNG, went to sea on Thursday last. She touched on the outer channel, but remained for a few minutes only, and sustained no possible damage. The bark John Colby has discharged her cargo. The bark Le Cocq has discharged cargo, and the captain is waiting advice from owners.

A Double Launch by two Brothers.

Messrs. WEBB & BELL launched from their yard at Greenpoint yesterday morning a fine bark of [illegible] tons, built for TUCKER, COOPER & Co., called the [illegible]. She is intended for the Manila trade, and is to be commanded by Capt. RICHARD LUCE. She is well adapted for carrying cargo, and is at the same time sufficiently sharp to sail well. She was launched under her masts in, and went off in fine style. Almost the last most gracefully in her native element. Almost at the same moment WM. H. WEBB launched a ship of 1,000 tons, called the Roger A. Heva, intended for the Antwerp Line of Post, SMITH & Co. This launch was also very successful.

The Queen of the Pacific, we regret to say, remains as at last accounts. The derrick is used to support her stern, and active measures are being

KANSAS AFFAIRS.

The Policy Decided Upon by the Free-State Party—Views of the "National Era."

From the National Era, April 9, 1857.

The policy of the late Administration in relation to Kansas, is to be maintained. The Territorial Judges and officers, the instruments of so much oppression, are to be continued in office. WHITFIELD is appointed Register, and DANIEL WOODSON, Receiver, for the Delaware District, in Kansas. Mr. BUCHANAN recognizes the validity of the so-called Legislature, and of all its acts; so does the party that elected him; so does the party that shall sustain him in the next Congress. In the Senate it has a decided majority; in the House it will have an available one. The Republicans will number only 94 in a body of 234—a strong minority, but not enough to carry through any measures for the relief of Kansas. The Pro Slavery majority, then, in that Territory, will be sustained for the next two years by Congress, for the next four years by the Federal Executive.

The question arises—Ought not the Free-State men of Kansas, under this change of circumstances, to change their policy? Indeed, has not the late action of the spurious Legislature paved the way for such a change?

It repealed the act imposing as a condition to the exercise of the right of suffrage, an oath to support the Fugitive Slave bill and the so called Territorial laws, so that Iowa bis settlers may not vote at any election, without incurring the guilt and dishonor involved in subscription to such test.

It also passed an act for enrolling the voters of the Territory, and providing for the election of delegates to a Convention to form a State Constitution.

This act, as might have been expected, is so framed as to invest the officers appointed by the spurious Legislature with the supervision and direction of the whole process of forming a State Government, from the taking of the census to the organization of the Convention; and the manifest purpose is, to secure a packed Convention and a Pro Slavery Constitution.

Still, in view of the considerations presented in the beginning of this article, and of the utter hopelessness of relief from this Administration or the next Congress, we did hope that the Free State men of Kansas would forego obstructions, and, placed as they are at a disadvantage, meet their adversaries at the ballot-box. But, our readers are apprised of the position they have taken.

Living so far from the scene of action, with a sincere respect for the judgment of men who have suffered so much in the cause of Liberty, it is with unfeigned diffidence we avow our dissent from the practical position taken. We admit all that is said in the preamble, and yet cannot accept the conclusion. The body which passed the act, is not a Legislature; the act itself is without legislative authority; in itself it is partisan, passed with a view to secure a partisan result, and accompanied by no adequate safeguards against fraud; it does exclude from suffrage residents entitled to vote under the organic law; and it contains no provision for committing the Constitution to be formed, to the People—and yet, the People of Kansas may participate in the election without compromising their rights as American citizens; and, if there be no other mode of securing relief from opression, without sacrificing the best interests of Kansas, and jeoparding the public peace

In the first place, they can vote, free from the imposition of test oaths, without being required to recognize the authority of the spurious Legislature, or of any of its acts.

In the next place, no such recognition is implied necessarily by participation in the election. No Territorial Legislature, without authority from Congress, can change the government of a Territory. The Free-State men, in their preamble, say that "the organic act does not authorize the Territorial Legislative powers, even when legitimately convened, to pass any enabling act to change the Government of the same." What is true. A lawfully constituted Territorial Legislature, or a spurious one, may initiate proceedings for a change of government; may take the lead in calling a convention to form a State Constitution; the convention so called may meet, and agree upon the plan of a constitution; but, unless the whole action has proceeded under an enabling act of Congress, the proceedings are of no binding force; the constitution is without vitality; the Territorial Govern ment continues; there is and can be no change till Congress act. If Congress ratify what has been done, the Territory becomes a State, and the constitution goes into effect. If not, not. So the people themselves might, in their primary assemblies, or by convention, take the lead, call a delegate convention to form a State Constitution—or, rather, the plan of one, without any enabling act by Congress. But their action would have no binding force, unless ratified by Congress.

What is the practical inference? That the Free-State men, while formally denying the authority of the spurious Legislature, and protesting against the unfair and partisan nature of its act providing for an election of Delegates to a Convention, still, pressed by the necessities of their condition, no longer required to submit to unconstitutional test oaths, and having no other way of redeeming themselves from a gross usurpation, may, without compromising their rights as American citizens, take part in this election, as they might in any other election initiated by an irresponsible body, provided a sound discretion justified the step.

Whether or not such a participation would involve a sacrifice "of the best interests of Kansas," and jeopard "the public peace," is a question in regard to which fair-minded men may honestly differ.

What have our friends to gain by not taking part in the election? The census of voters has already been taken; the lists are now being filed. All this they cannot prevent. Would it not be better to have the lists correct and complete? The Probate Judge may enlarge and correct up to the first of May next, and the lists are to be printed. If the Free State men stand aloof, they expose themselves to misrepresentation that they could easily prevent. Why not appoint a committee in every precinct, to see to it that the name of no qualified Free-State voter be omitted, and the name of no spurious voter be entered? The printed lists would furnish data for the exposure of fraud. If they take no part in the business, they may proclaim the existence of frand, and assert that the lists are spurious, but what will be their evidence? Resolutions of meetings prove nothing: we must have votes. Whether the Free-State men finally vote or not, we hold that the best interests of Kansas require that they should have the lists of voters fairly and honestly made up, or where there is frand, they should put it on record with the proofs.

Ought they not to vote? The election will proceed, whether they vote or not; the convention will be held, the Constitution will be formed, and next winter it will be submitted to Congress, with the sanction of the Federal Executive. Their refusal to participate in the proceedings will avail nothing, will not detract from their importance in the estimation of the Administration, or Administration Party. It will be said everywhere that they feared to expose their weakness, and therefore retired from the conflict. And even their friends, although assured that they constitute the majority of the bona fide settlers, will not have the evidence in their possession to prove the fact.

What do our friends propose to do? Fall back on the Topeka Constitution. Governor ROBINSON, after having resigned the Governorship, has resumed it, in accordance with the wishes of the convention held at Topeka on the 10th of March. He recommends that the Legislature under this Constitution meet in June, and decide what is to be done. His opinion seems to be, that the Government that is first in the field will be the first to be recognized by Congress. We are amazed at this. The form of the State Government, was in the field during the existence of the late Congress, in one branch of which the Republicans had the majority; but that Congress has passed away, and the form is yet but a form. Only one Democrat recognized it in the last Congress, only of seventeen from the Free States. There will be three times seventeen in the next House; how many will recognize it? Can we shut our eyes to the past? The Topeka Constitution has no force without the sanction of Congress. Will a Democratic Congress be more favorable than a Republican one? It is vain, utterly vain, to think of securing the approbation of the Administration and its Party in the next Congress to the Topeka Constitution and Government. The battle will be fought over the Constitution to be formed by the convention now called.

It seems to us, then, that there is no alternative for our friends in Kansas, but participation in this election or revolution. If they do not contest it, their strength will be unfelt and unascertained, and the evidences of fraud cannot be demonstrated. If they go into it heartily, under protest against the validity of the spurious Legislature, and the partizan character of its act, they may be cheated, but they can expose the cheatery: they may be outvoted; but, if this be done by illegal voters, they can demonstrate the fact; at the worst they might fail to elect a majority of the delegates, but they would be sure of enough to influence the proceedings, and hold them up in their true light—probably enough to secure a provision for submitting the Constitution to the people for their judgment. Having thus gone bravely into the struggle, and done their best, should a Pro-Slavery Constitution be at last adopted, and should it be shown that it was the work of a packed Convention, under a partizan act, giving rise and impunity to fraud and illegal voting, the Free-State men would have a just claim on the respect and sympathy of right-minded men of whatever party—their protests would be listened to by the next Congress, and there would be ground for hope that a majority might be found to overrule the action of the Convention. If, however, they would have been organized as a party, and, let the action of Congress be what it might, they would be prepared to take the field at the organization under the new Government, should it be established, and in time recover all that had been lost.

If they should they reconsider their position, and consent to participate in the election, they must perfect their organization in every town and precinct; appoint committees of vigilance to examine the lists, to see that every Free-State voter be enrolled, to point out fraud and illegality, and, if uncorrected, to record their names with legal proof, to be at the polls, to protect the rights of voters, to watch the voting and the judges, and by every wise and efficient method prevent fraud.

For one, we hope our friends will receive these suggestions kindly, and reconsider their policy.

Last week, several hundred coal boats being at Schuylkill Haven, those of the boatmen who were opposed to the low rate, got up a strike and refused to let any coal business be done on the canal. Several boats which were loaded at $1 80 were bored and sunk, and the boatmen kept the whole place in lawless uproar. At a number of collieries the miners have turned out for higer wages. Between these two influences the trade is, as the Miner's Journal says, in a state of revolution.

NEWS BY THE MAILS.

The people of Melrose (Can.) are greatly excited in consequence of the murder of EDMUND RUSSELL, proprietor of a popular tavern called "Budd's Old Stand." Deceased died very suddenly, under such suspicious circumstances that a Coroner ordered the body to be exhumed. This becoming known, the widow endeavored to escape to the United States, accompanied by a man named NEIL BEATON, whom she had already married, although her late husband had been dead but a few days. The Coroner immediately issued a warrant for their apprehension. The investigation proves that the man BEATON had formerly been engaged to do carpenter work about the house, but had been discharged by RUSSELL, in consequence of the latter observing him indulge in improper familiarities with his wife. Shortly after BEATON's dismissal, the husband was taken suddenly ill, and soon died.

A Savannah paper says of the project for draining the great Okefenokee Swamp: "Among the passengers by the St. John's on her last trip from Florida was R. L. HUNTER, a competent civil engineer, who has been engaged with a corps of assistants for the last four months in the exploration of the Okefenokee Swamp. His prime object, as previously stated, has been to determine the practicability of draining it at a reasonable cost, though the collateral question of its value when drained has not been overlooked. To facilitate the decision of the latter, Mr. HUNTER selected specimens of soil found in different portions of the Swamp which are to be submitted to a chemical analysis. He has no doubt of the possibility of draining the whole or a very large portion of the Swamp by a canal three or four miles in length, connecting it with the St. Mary's River.

A letter from Winston, Md., dated March 28, gives an account of a tragical affair that happened on the night of the 27th ult. The son of PHILIP PENDLETON and a young man by the name of DRAIN, from Chicago, had some misunderstanding, which resulted in DRAIN's challenging young PENDLETON. He accepted the challenge, and chose for weapons bowie knives. They nailed themselves down to a two-inch oak plank by the pants, and fought until DRAIN was mortally wounded. Young PENDLETON was cut nearly in pieces, and now lies in a critical condition. Part of PENDLETON's knife is still in DRAIN's head. There is no hope of his recovery. The Doctor thinks they will both die. I will write soon and give particulars of this sad occurrence. DRAIT was 22 years old, small of stature, while PENDLETON was about 19.

The Rochester Democrat says that on Tuesday the money safe of the American Express Company was seized by the vigilant Custom House officer at the Bridge. It was held by this personage for some time, and when opened was found to contain half a million of money, and a pair of old boots belonging to the messenger. The boots were declared contraband, but the safe was allowed to go on after a vexatious delay. This is the same official who followed a man to his hotel and seized a set of artificial teeth which an unsuspecting traveler had taken out of his mouth to cleanse. Pleasant route that.

The Troy Times says: "The vile denizens of houses of prostitution have taken the cue from the recent action in the Police Court, and there was a general stampede among them yesterday afternoon. Some have gone to New-York, by boat and cars, others to Bennington, others to Saratoga and Whitehall, and others to Schenectady. Some few more were seen scampering over the hill on the Brunswick road, on foot, and will probably return in a day or two, when they suppose the excitement will have died out. At least fifty of them are known to have left the city."

In course of collecting material to illustrate IRVING'S Life of Washington, the publishers have had the good fortune to discover an original miniature on ivory of WASHINGTON, supposed to have been painted by COPLEY, at the time of WASHINGTON's visit to Boston, at the close of the French War in 1756. The earliest portrait previously known to exist is that by PEALE, taken at the age of 40. This having been painted at about the age of 25, is, consequently, the earliest likeness extant.

A negro belonging to Judge STAMPS, employed on the railroad near Hampstead, Texas, attempted a few days since, to kill Mr. DUDLEY, the overseer. Mr. DUDLEY fell senseless, and was thought to be dead, but it is now thought he will recover. We will publish the letter in our next.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT.—APRIL 9.

Before Judge Nelson.

The following named gentlemen were impannelled as Grand Jurors in this Court this morning:

CLARKSON CROLIUS, Foreman

Willis Blackstone, Henry W. Hicks, Robt. W. Bousall,
Luther Baldwin, Wm. F. Mott, Jr., Thos. Christy,
Frederick Boll, James Nash, Henry Corse,
Henry Conklin, Ebenezer Peck, Edward S. Clark,
Homer Franklin, John A. Appleby, Peter J. Nevins, Jr.,
Wm. Forbes, John Axford, Wm F. Prost,
Edward Fletcher, S. B. Althouse, Jr., John Pendleton,

Judge NELSON charged the Jury at some length, commenting upon a list of cases which were to come before them. Upon that list were four cases of murder, two separate ones against Samuel Osborne and Samuel Taylor, the first and second mates of the ship Samuel Russell, for murdering two of the crew, and two against four seamen of the brig General Pierce, for murdering the Captain and cook of the brig. The mates of the Samuel Russell, as will be seen, were discharged on a hearing of the case before the Commissioner during the day.

Judge NELSON, after speaking of some cases of smuggling and false invoices, charged the Jury as to violations of the neutrality laws as follows:

There is also a charge, I perceive, in the list, of a violation of the neutrality act of 1818—the case of Alexander C. Lawrence, Joseph W. Fabens and Henry Bolton. They are charged with enlisting men within the territories of the United States for military service in the foreign State of Nicaragua.

The act of 1818, section 2, provides in substance, that if any person within the United States shall enlist or hire, or obtain other persons to enlist or hire, or shall retain or employ other persons to go beyond the limits of the United States for the purpose of enlisting, or with the intent to be enlisted and entered into the service of a foreign State, as a soldier or as a seaman, every such person is deemed guilty of a high misdemeanor, punishable by fine and imprisonment. There is a proviso to this section, which is a very proper one, which permits a foreigner who is here transiently to enlist in the service of his own sovereign, as a seaman, on any of his vessels which may be casually here; and he may hire the subjects of the same sovereign who are casually here to do so, provided our own government and the foreign state are at peace. But so far as regards persons here, whether citizens or foreigners, it is no matter; they are prohibited by the law from enlisting themselves in the service of a foreign state, as soldiers or seamen; they are prohibited, also, from hiring or employing other persons to enlist or to enter into the service of a foreign state; they are also prohibited from hiring or inducing others to go beyond the territories of the United States—to go in this case if you please to Nicaragua—with the intent at the time that they are thus hired or induced to go beyond the territories of the United States, to enlist on their arrival at the place of destination. These are the three several acts prohibited, and by the statutes made a misdemeanor, punishable by fine and imprisonment."

It is your duty, gentlemen, to inquire into these matters, and if you find that such onences have been committed, to present the parties for trial.

After charging the Jury as to the evidence they were to receive and their own proceedings, the Judge dismissed the Jury.

Edward Saportas vs. James W. Elwell.—This case was brought to trial before a Jury this morning. The plaintiff sues to recover a balance of the proceeds of cargo of the bark Harriet Francis, which sailed from this port with it bound to Antwerp, but by perils of the sea was compelled to put back, and a portion of the cargo was found to be so damaged that it was found necessary to sell it to prevent injury to the balance. The defendant alleges that he was only the agent of the shipowner here, and that he had paid over, as directed by the owner, all the proceeds before receiving notice of the plaintiff's claim. He also alleges that there is freight to be deducted from the amount. The evidence being in, a verdict was taken for the plaintiffs, subject to the opinion of the Court and to adjustment as to amount.

U. S. COMMISSIONERS COURT.—APRIL 7.

Before Commissioner White.

CHARGE OF MURDER ON THE HIGH SEAS.

Samuel Taylor and Samuel Osborne, chief mates of the Samuel Russell, were charged with the murder of one of the crew of the Samuel Russell, known by the name of "Dutch Bill." The murder was alleged to have taken place upon the voyage preceding the last, from China to Hampton Roads, Va. Only the first mate has been arrested. His examination was had today. For lack of confirmation of his story the Commissioner dismissed the complaint.

CHARGE OF CRUEL PUNISHMENT.

William Stacy, the second mate of the Christiana, was committed for examination on a charge of cruel and unjust punishment inflicted upon James Wm. Gordon, one of the crew of the vessel. The Captain says that the second mate gave a general order to the complainant about fixing the vessel's tackling, and because he did not happen to commence as the mate expected he would, the latter beat and kicked him, from the result of which he was laid up a week. The Captain ordered the second mate from duty on account of his cruelty. Such men as this second mate, the Captain said, brought disgrace upon their profession. He urged that they accused should be properly punished, to let cruel Captains and officers of vessels know that they could not beat their sailors with impunity.

The Coroner Connery Investigation.

EXAMINATION OF DR. UHL.

The investigation into the charges preferred against Coroner CONNERY, in effect that his conduct was improper during the inquest on the body of Dr. BURDELL, was continued yesterday, before Judge DALY.

Dr. David Uhl was the first witness called, but before any testimony had been received Mr. Jordan wished to understand what particular charge and specification was to be investigated.

Mr. Clinton, who appeared for the District Attorney, replied that he proposed to investigate charge first, latter part of specification second: He denied the family physician access to Mrs. Cunningham when she was unwell and desired to see him.

Mr. Jordan objected to take testimony on that, because it was not sufficiently definite and of no avail in any case.

Judge DALY said he could not form an opinion of the materiality of the evidence until he heard it.

Mr. Jordan then proposed a suspension of the case until the opinion of the Executive could be had on what kind of evidence should be admitted.

Judge DALY called for the Governor's order.

Mr. Jordan thought the Governor had no right to order the Judge to do an illegal act. He read from a letter of the Governor's to the effect that the charges must be specifically made and so admitted or denied, and claims that the charges had not been preferred as required by the Governor's letter.

Judge DALY did not see that he had anything to do with that. If a question arose as to the materiality of the evidence, he might decide upon that.

Mr. Jordan renewed his application for a suspension of the case, that he might obtain the Governor's opinion.

Judge DALY said he had already adjourned the investigation several days, and when the District-Attorney was ready to go on, he did not believe he had power to adjourn, unless for urgent public reasons. He thought the charge sufficiently clear and explicit for the purposes of the investigation. Whether it was sufficient to warrant a removal of the Coroner, was something with which he had nothing whatever to do.

Q.—Are you a practicing physician? A.—I am.

Q.—How long have you been such? A.—Seven years.

Q.—Are you connected with any of the medical colleges in this City; if so, what college and in what capacity? A.—I deliver lectures on Medical Jurisprudence at the New-York Medical College.

Q.—Prior to the holding of the inquest by Coroner Connery as to the cause of the death of Harvey Burdell, state whether or not you were the family physician of the lady called Mrs Emma Auguste Cunningham? A.—I attended her family on several occasions for a year and a half, and prescribed for her family in sickness.

Judge Daly—Whose family?

Witness—Mrs. Cunningham's.

Q.—Were you her family physician?

Objected to and objection sustained.

Q.—Do you know of the attendance of any other physician during the time you have named? A.—I do not.

Q.—Pending that inquest did you attend her during any part of the time as her family physician? A.—I did.

Q.—During any part of that time will you state whether you were denied access to her by the Coroner? Objected to.

By the Judge—Q.—Did you apply to the Coroner, at that time, for leave to attend her as her physician?

Objected to. Overruled and exceptions taken.

Question resumed—A.—I did on one occasion.

Q.—State what transpired between you and the Coroner on that occasion, in reference to this subject. [Objected to, as the testimony now stood, and exception taken.] A.—I called to see her on one afternoon; I was not sent for; I was attending her as her physician daily; she was ill.

Q.—Pending the inquest were you sent for? A.—I was, on the 6th day of February last.

Q.—State whether this was before or after the time when you called to see her on a certain afternoon, stated by you in a previous answer. A.—It was three days before.

Q.—State whether you attended her as her physician after you were sent for, as above stated. A.—I made her three visits.

Q.—State the times as nearly as you can recollect. A.—On the 6th, 7th and 8th of February I visited her.

Q.—State what transpired between you and the Coroner when you applied to him, as you have previously stated, for leave to attend her as her physician. A.—The Coroner informed me that some of the Jury and other parties had desired that [illegible] should be permitted to visit [illegible], except those engaged in conducting the examination, and that information of the proceedings at the inquest had been conveyed to Mrs. Cunningham; that is all he said at that time; I told him, in reply, that I had been very careful not to give her any information, and had refused her request to do so; he said, in reply, that papers had been introduced into the room, and I told him that I was willing to be searched; he said he had no desire to do so, and if Mrs. Cunningham desired very much to see me next morning, he would himself go into the room with me; I can't recollect any other convers

THE FORSAKEN BRIDE.
Just commenced in No. 71, of
FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER.

The new story will form an era in the history of similar publications, combining, as it does, the most startling and yet beautiful incidents, founded upon one of the most exciting traditions of our Revolutionary times, and introducing to the reader characters fraught with thrilling interest. OTELIA CLAYTON has been pronounced by critical judges a remarkable literary production, and compares favorably with the best stories that have appeared for many years, and unsurpassed by none. It was selected from a very large number which have been offered us for publication, and we can cordially recommend it to our friends everywhere, as one of the most intensely interesting and excellent serials ever published in this country.

The author is a lady distinguished as an ornament in the most refined circle of the South; and one who, while she combines great power in the use of her pen, and possesses a strong and nervous intellect, is still remarkable for delineating the loveliest scenes of domestic life, and for her delicacy and extreme refinement; and yet few authors of the sterner sex equal her in portraying those terrible pictures in which passion and the most intense emotions are brought into action.

The scene of this bewitching story opens upon an old ancestral estate in Virginia, and introduces characters in which are strongly compounded all the virtues and weaknesses of persons living under Republican institutions, and yet cherishing in their hearts a pride peculiar to the aristocracy of the mother country. The plotting and counter-plotting, the struggle of pride with love, of sympathy with despair, and delineated with a master hand, reminding the reader of those subtile analyzations so peculiar to Jane Eyre.

This story will be most brilliantly illustrated, and scenery introduced will be drawn from nature; the living, sentient beings, from the pencil of one of our most distinguished artists. In conclusion of this notice, we will repeat our anxiety to make FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED PAPER the medium of conveying to the family circle, that sacred, nay holy place, such literature as will amuse, instruct and deeply interest, but will at the same time leave no impression behind but of goodness and of virtue. To accomplish this we shall spare no trouble or outlay; and if we fail ever in our anticipations, it will be because we cannot always, even by lavish expenditure of money and the most unrelenting care, accomplish our most cherished wishes.

From the Evening Post.

A good many editions of Scott have been published; and we recollect many more expensive than this, but nothing so good in the way of an impression for the mass of readers; nothing so perfectly faultless in its mechanical execution.

From the New-York Tribune.

Ticknor & Fields announce a beautiful family edition of the "Waverley Novels," in forty-eight 16mo volumes. From the specimens which we have seen of this work we can confidently recommend it. It is illustrated by designs from the most eminent artists, including Birket Foster, Darley, Landseer, Harvey and Fasel, in admirably executed steel engravings, and contains all the author's latest notes and corrections. The typography is in the style of simple elegance for which the Boston press is distinguished. It is the intention of the publishers to issue two volumes every month, until the whole series is completed.

From the Home Journal.

The Household Edition of Scott is the most perfect thing possible to Art and Enterprise, and every family should own it.

From the Boston Courier.

The size of the volumes is just right; the binding admirable for its strength as well as neatness; the paper excellent; the type clear and elegant; the illustrations executed in a style honorable, in the highest degree, to the progress of American art. We rejoice to learn that the publishers are reaping the just harvest of this enterprise.

From the Boston Journal.

This edition must, of necessity, from its cheapness and sterling merit, supersede all other editions which have been published in this country.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

State legislation affecting the City, rapidly advances to its consummation at Albany. The Senate yesterday passed the NEW CHARTER which had previously passed the Assembly;—bnt sundry amendments were made in the Senate, the precise terms of which have not reached us. Their object, however, is to preserve to the Street Commissioner the patronage which he and his political, as well as personal, friends very justly consider the most valuable of the perquisites of his office. The amendments were made by Senators BROOKS and PETTY of this City, who are members of the Senate Committee to which the bill was referred. The bill as thus amended goes back to the Assembly, where the amendments will probably be concurred in and the New Charter will thus require only the Governor's signature to become a law. In the main its provisions are eminently judicious and will render it easier for the people of the City, if they are disposed to do so, to have an honest and efficient municipal Government. The bill creating a METROPOLITAN POLICE District, embracing the counties of New-York, Kings, Richmond and Westchester, was also passed in the Senate with slight amendments, in which there is no reason to doubt the Assembly will promptly concur. The most conspicuous feature of this bill is that it takes the control of the Police Department of this City from the present Commission,—which consists of Mayor WOOD, Recorder SMITH, and Judge RUSSELL,—and places it in the hands of an independent Board of five members to be appointed by the Governor and Senate. The details of the bill are in the main copied from the English law creating the Metropolitan Police for the City of London. The practical operation of this important law will evidently depend entirely upon the character of the Board of Police Commissioners:—and the Governor owes it to himself, as well as to the vast interests concerned, to see to it that this most important and responsible Board is not handed over to any political party or made the instrument of political faction,—and that none but men of the highest character, who command the respect and confidence of the whole community, and who are not conspicuous as political partisans, are intrusted with its delicate and difficult responsibilities. The whole community will regard with surprise and alarm any indication that in a matter of such vast importance the Governor's personal judgment is to be overborne by any party pressure or any political emergency whatever.

The important bill fixing lines for the piers and bulkheads of the City, was also passed in the Senate yesterday. A document of some importance from its relation to the interest of the City in this and other City measures, was read in the Board of Aldermen last evening, and will be found in another part of this morning's TIMES.

The steamship Niagara, from Liverpool on the 28th ult., arrived at Halifax yesterday afternoon, bringing three days' later news from Europe. Our telegraphic summary of her advices, which embody nothing of special importance, politically, will be found elsewhere. From Great Britain we learn that the country was in a ferment consequent upon the elections for the new Parliament, though very few members had yet been returned. Appearances, however, were in favor of Lord PALMERSTON. The Paris Conference had done nothing of consequence in reference to the Neufchatel question, though there was no doubt of an amicable adjustment of the difficulty. The Spanish Government, it is said, have in serious contemplation the establishment of a submarine telegraph between Cuba and the United States. The first division of the fleet to convey the expedition to invade Mexico was to sail about the 28th of March for Havana. The Austrian Government had issued a circular dispatch setting forth the causes of its difficulty with Sardinia, in which it is alleged that Piedmont seeks to place herself at the head of the revolutionary movement in Italy—a movement, the success of which would be the destruction of the Austrian domination in Italy. The news from the East is interesting. It is stated that the Emperor of China disapproves of the proceedings on the part of the Chinese at Canton, and has issued orders having in view the conciliation of the English. Particulars are given of the forcing of the Japanese port of Nangasaki by the English naval force. The rights of England, France and the United States have been guaranteed anew by the Japanese. The insurrection in Persia, reported by the previous arrival, had assumed a formidable aspect. A battle was reported to have taken place between the Bombay (British) and the Persian cavalry, in which the former were victorious. Commercially, the news is also interesting. The British Board of Trade had made their returns for February, which show an increase of twenty per cent. over last year; and there was an increase of $24,000 in the bullion in the Bank of England. The French Budget for 1855 had also been published, and contains some important recommendations. Cotton was quiet, but steady, with a slight decline in some of the lower qualities.

The Coroner's Jury at Hamilton, Canada, have completed their investigation into the causes of the late melancholy disaster at the Desjardins Canal. The verdict attributes the accident to the breaking of the forward axle of the engine-truck before the train reached the bridge, so that the locomotive diverged to the right, crushing and tearing away the support. The bridge, had the train remained on the track, was of sufficient strength. The engine proves to have been in perfect order, and nobody is blamed for the occurrence of the disaster. The Jury, however, urge the importance of erecting a permanent bridge forthwith, and separating the tracks of the Toronto and Great Western Roads, in order that switches may be done away with.

☞ The Executive Committee of the State Temperance Society have issued a protest against the passage by the Assembly of the bill to restrict and regulate the sale of intoxicating liquors, which has already passed the Senate—or any law whatever on this subject short of total prohibition. They recount the earnest but unavailing labors they have expanded to prevent this result, and menace those who have voted for the bill with the charge, to be urged before their constituents, of "Apostacy to Temperence."

At the meeting of the Board of Aldermen, last night, Alderman WILSON spoke in lofty defiance of "public opinion." He did not hesitate to say that he did not care a straw for public opinion. Public opinion had not sent him there. The debate that drew out the defiant Alderman arose upon the presentation of the report recommending the augmentation of official salaries. Upon vote Alderman WILSON was left alone in his opposition. An official communication was received from Mr. EBLING, hoping for a confirmation of his street-cleaning contracts. Since the contracts were awarded DANIEL GALLAGHER had backed down from the task of cleaning his Wards, so the Eighteenth had been handed over to CHRISTOPHER KERSS, the next lowest bidder; the Nineteenth and Twenty-first to JOHN EAGAN. The Twentieth and Twenty-second go to Mr. REYNOLDS, the machine-man. A memorial against the proceedings before the Legislature was rapidly read and adopted by a vote of 12 to 4.

Corporation-Counseler BUSTEED has reported his opinion to the Aldermen, that the contracts under which the Battery is enlarged are illegal, because they were confirmed by the two Boards of the Common Council during different years.

The investigation into the charges preferred against Coroner CONNERY for improper behavior during the "Grand Inquest" on the body of Dr BURDELL was resumed, yesterday, before Judge DALY. Dr. UHL was the only witness examined, and there was nothing of importance elicited, other than that, on the 9th of February, the Coroner preferred that he should not visit Mrs. CUNNINGHAM—he was her family physician, and she was then ill. The case will be resumed on Saturday.

A Grand Jury was impanneled in the United States Circuit Court yesterday. CLARKSON CROLIUS was appointed foreman. Judge NELSON, in his charge, referred, among others, to the case of FABENS, LAWRENCE and BOLTON, charged with violation of the neutrality laws, and also to four cases of alleged murder on the high seas.

The question whether a ship is entitled to any freight on cargo damaged by peril of the sea, after she has commenced her voyage, and sold to preserve it from total loss, came before this Court, among other questions, yesterday, in the case of LAPORTAS vs. ELWELL. Nothing was passed upon, however.

It is now nearly a year since the examination in the Parish Will case was commenced—it will probably be six months (not weeks) longer before the case is terminated. Testimony is taking now on behalf of the proponents of the will. The contestants are to follow with rebutting evidence, after which the proponents also put in rebutting testimony. After the evidence is closed it is very certain that the opposing counsel will occupy a month or two in the preparation and delivery of their arguments. It may be safely calculated, therefore, that with the other cases before the Surrogate, the Parish Will case will not be concluded before October next. There have been thirty-one witnesses examined thus far, and their testimony extends over fifteen hundred pages.

At Hope Chapel, last night, Rev. E. CORWIN delivered a lecture, to a good audience, on "California—its Resources and Capabilities." It was not remarkable for novelty, but in a pleasant manner reviewed the extraordinary history of the Golden Region, and pictured the miner's life so far from couleur de rose that only the most sinewy and desperate adventurer would think of shouldering a pick-axe. Mr. CORWIN has had considerable experience in California, and his anticipations of its future are as golden as its soil, notwithstanding the drawbacks of a rowdy population, and a state of social affairs that frequently demands the attention of a Vigilance Committee.

SAMUEL TAYLOR, the second mate of the Samuel Russell, was examined yesterday before United States Commissioner WHITE, charged with the murder of one of the crew of the Samuel Russell called "Dutch Bill." The evidence in the case being contradictory, the Commissioner dismissed the complaint. SAMUEL OSBORNE, the first mate of the vessel, is jointly charged with the second mate in the commission of the alleged murder. He has not yet been arrested.

A man named JAMES H. CHESSE was badly stabbed at the Merchants' Hotel, Cortlandt-street, yesterday morning, by ROBERT H. LITTEL. CHESSE and LITTEL are mercantile "drummers," and the difficulty that gave rise to the affray had its origin in professional rivalry, the former alleging that the latter had made statements concerning him calculated to injure his business. LITTEL is in custody.

KARL SLIDELL, the young German emigrant who was found Wednesday morning in a new building on Broadway, suffering from arsenic poisoning, died yesterday morning at the Fifteenth Ward Station-house. Coroner PERRY held an inquest upon the body. Verdict: "Suicide by taking arsenic."

To-day being Good Friday, no business will be done in the Law Courts.

Kansas Politics—Position of the Free-State Party.

We have taken occasion, more than once, to express the opinion that, in deciding to take no part in the coming Territorial Election, the Free-State men in Kansas have made a great mistake—that they have thrown away the chance, first, of controlling the result, and second, of holding a position from which they could appeal, with hope of success, to the President, to Congress, and the People, if the real sentiment of the Territory should be overborne by force or fraud. The Tribune, the Evening Post, the Albany Evening Journal and other leading party papers on the other hand, not only sustain warmly the determination of the Free-State Convention to ignore the Territorial authorities altogether, but censure with equal warmth those who differ from them. The first-named of these journals, in its yesterday's issue, stigmatizes as "dissembling enemies and hollow, trimming friends," those who doubt the wisdom of the course which the Free-State men in Kansas have resolved to take. Our purpose is not to contest the propriety of these epithets, but to notice the fact that the National Era must be classed among the journals to which they are to be applied. That able and influential organ of the distinctively Anti-Slavery sentiment of the Republican Party, in an article which we copy in another column, urges that the Free-State men in Kansas should even now "reconsider their policy" and take an active, earnest and efficient part in the elections which are to be held in June. We see small reason for believing that they will do so, but much for believing that they will deeply regret it if they do not.

The Free-State men in Kansas are merely a political party—seeking, as all political parties seek, to obtain control of the Government. There are only two ways in which this can be done: one is, by beating their opponents at the ballot-box—the other is, by revolution. The latter mode they disclaim. All that remains, therefore, is to consider whether they are pursuing the course best adapted to give them immediate or eventual success at the polls. They refuse to have anything to do with the election. They will not vote—they will not attempt to procure the enrollment of their names as voters—they will not recognize the election as valid—they ignore the proceeding altogether! Suppose a political party in New-York were to pursue this course, what would be thought of its sanity or sincerity? But, it is said, they are doomed to be cheated;—the poll-books, the polls, the laws and all the machinery of the election, are in the hands of their opponents,—and they have no chance of fair play or of success. This is true:—and it is equally true of the position of the Republican Party in this City;—yet no one ever urged it as a reason why the members of that party in this City should not go to the polls and vote. On the contrary, it was precisely the reason why they should vote,—and watch the polls,—claim their rights, resist all illegal action, and be prepared with evidence of whatever cheating and violence might be employed to deprive them of their rights. Why is not the same rule which is good in New-York, good in Kansas also? But, it is said, by voting the Free-State men "recognize the bogus Legislature,"—"throw overboard their own organization," and are precluded from future complaint or resistance. They recognize that Legislature simply as a de facto government,—as in possession of power:—and is not this so? Can they deprive it of power by ignoring, or refusing to recognize it? Unfortunately, its practical validity does not depend upon their recognition. It is recognized by the Executive and Judiciary of the Territory, by the Administration at Washington, and by the party which will control the next Congress.

2. They do not "throw overboard," or in the least impair, their own organization as a political party. On the contrary, it will be strengthened and consolidated by such united and resolute action. Their organization as a State Government, under the Topeka Constitution, and with Dr. ROBINSON as their Governor, would indeed be abandoned and "thrown overboard"—and the sooner the better. Why men of sagacity and common sense should deem it worth their while to keep up such a farce any longer, we cannot conceive. If they propose to put that Topeka Government into active operation, let them do it. That would be revolution, and, whether right or wrong, would be intelligible. But this purpose they disavow. That they hope for its recognition by President BUCHANAN, and admission to the Union under it by the next Congress, they are not foolish enough to pretend. What practical good, then, is to be attained by keeping it up we find it impossible to conjecture. It places the people of Kansas in a false position;—it threatens constantly to embroil the Territory in strife, detrimental to its interests, and ruinous to the emigration which is its life-blood; and, after doing all the mischief of which it is capable, it can at last only explode like the hollow bubble which it is. The sooner it is abandoned, or merged in a healthy, legitimate party organization—seeking its ends by lawful and usual means—the sooner will the Free-State men of Kansas place themselves in a position where they can render effective service to the cause they have at heart.

And 3. It is only by taking part in the election that they can gain any foothold for future operations. If, while refusing to do so, they allege fraud in the canvass, it will not avail them,—for the fraud they may prove would not have affected the result. They are placing the whole power in the hands of their opponents, and are throwing away all chance of remonstrating against its wrongful exorcise. Their proposed action will insure the enactment of a Pro-Slavery Constitution and deprive a Congress, which is committed to the doctrine of popular sovereignty, of all excuse for rejecting it! If this is wisdom or good policy, it is of a very peculiar and transcendental sort.

The Ethics of Fillibusterism.

Fillibusterism owes a great deal of the evil repute which has fallen upon it of late years, more to the malpractices, or bad character of those who have made it their calling, than to any peculiar atrocity in itself. The aggression of the civilized upon the uncivilized, of the active upon the lazy, of the enterprising upon the timid and cautious, is not a thing of yesterday, and was not begun by General WALKER. England, France, Spain, Portugal, and Holland have been fillibustering for the last four hundred years. The Spanish colonization of South America, and the French and English colonization of North America, and the Dutch occupation of the Spice Islands, were all undertakings which, whatever the law of nations may say, were certainly not in accordance with the law of nature. Most of the great names of the Elizabethan era, DRAKE, HAWKINS, FROBISHER, RALEIGH, ESSEX, and others, were the names of men whose greatest glories were reaped in enterprises which no diplomatist now-a-days would attempt to justify. Their great talents and great virtues, their sterling simplicity of character and romantic daring, hide from our view the thousand dark spots which sullied most of their undertakings. One of the most popular of modern novelists has made the fillibusters of the sixteenth century the heroes of one of his most popular novels; and we venture to say, few people have risen from the perusal of it without feeling all the better of being cheated into sympathy with the bold adventurers who three centuries ago fought, reveled and plundered along the shores of the Spanish main.

We may come down a good deal nearer our own time, and find plenty of "historical parallels," for anybody who is fond of them. We should like to know whether every European settlement that has been planted in Hindostan, has not been planted by fillibusters. CLIVE was a fillibuster, and so was WARREN HASTINGS,—and they were both none the less heroes for that. Sir JAMES BROOKE, the well-known "Rajah of Sarawak," is tout bonnement a fillibuster. Most of the Indian officers who have done most to maintain, and to extend the influence of the English East India Company, have been men who acted sternly and promptly in their dealings with the natives on their own responsibility, without any regard to the "law of nations," and without altering their conduct by one jot or tittle because they happened to fight under a "recognized flag." No "recognized flag" appears to entail any peculiar restrictions upon men fighting in remote places with barbarous races. It would be hard to bring any charge against WALKER, of which Russian generals in the Caucasus, and French generals in Algeria have not been guilty. Regret it as we may, we cannot get rid of the fact that civilization and commerce are determined upon taking possession of the globe—honestly if they can, but forcibly if they must. Wherever the civilized trader has come in contact with the barbarian, we see the one advancing remorselessly and invincibly, and the other receding helplessly and hopelessly. Look in what direction we may, from Tartary to Texas, the same movement is going on. We detest most of the consequences of the doctrine of "manifest destiny," but there is no escaping from the fact that the march of civilization is irresistible, and, moreover, that its track is but too frequently marked by violations of abstract right and justice.

We must say, however, that nothing we read of fillibustering in past ages, or amongst foreign nations, reconciles us to the form it has taken, and the agents it has chosen, in these latter days. The great mass of those who in former times have made their names famous in connection with it were men whom simplicity, enthusiasm and faith, and an ambition which, if ferocious and cruel in many of its manifestations, was at least devout and lofty, raised far out of the common order of freebooters. They were "gentlemen" in an age when a "gentleman" was a better, braver, freer man than his fellows; a man who, if unscrupulous in the selection of his means, was at least lofty in his aims. They were men who rose to the level of great undertakings in an age when great deeds were a necessity, and when man had to accomplish them with but little aid from art, and mainly by his own courage and his own faith. Our modern fillibusters are the scum of our society, not men whom "quick bosoms" drive upon desperate adventures; but men whom rascality has outlawed, men whom society, instead of sending forth with blessings, kicks out with contempt. Broken down gamblers, drunken lawyers, unsuccessful publicans, dissipated shoemakers, detested swindlers, men under whose feet every plank has broken, are those who now-a-days assume the bearing, and attempt to walk in the footsteps, of CORTEZ or of CLIVE. If modern civilization can find no better materials for its advanced guard than the scrapings of bar-rooms and jails, it were almost better it should become stationary. If we cannot propagate "Americanism" by any more decent agents than "Colonel" TITUS or "General" WHEAT, it were better that the eagle should furl his wings. The voice of a great nation should not make itself heard through the stammerings and belchings of drunkards. We confess we should like to see Central America a busy seat of commerce governed by our laws, and progressing under our auspices. If fillibustering means the spread of freedom of speech, of trial by jury, of equal rights, of law and order, to regions which Providence has hitherto shrouded in barbarism, we confess we are fillibusters. But if it mean simply, as its history in Nicaragua would seem to indicate, a sort of extension of South Carolina or Mississippi, with their various "peculiarities," their mob law, their ferocious manners, their lazy habits, their sham "chivalry," their censorship of the press, their stagnation and inanity,—if it mean a reproduction ad infinitum of public men like Governor WISE and Colonel DAVIS, and the late lamented P. S. BROOKS,—if it mean simply niggers and hominy and cocktails,—we will none of it.

Street-Cleaning and the Board of Councilmen.

Councilman REILLY introduced a resolution on Wednesday evening, which was seconded by his colleague Mr. WARNER, directing the Comptroller not to pay money on any contracts not confirmed by the Common Council. Mr. OTTARSON seized upon the occasion to make a withering, plain and common-sense exposure, of the rascality and villainy of the plundering hordes around the City Hall, who are endeavoring to drag the City back, under the control of the mud, garbage and offal dynasty, from which it is striving to be emancipated.

The Mayor, Comptroller and Commissioner of Streets and Lamps, have recently signed contracts, by which the different Wards of the City have been delivered over to the care of gentlemen, who have fulfilled all the requirements of the Charter; whose securities are ample and satisfactory; and who have begun to perform the duties required of them with a zeal and energy without an example in this City for many years. The only individuals disappointed by this action on the part of the City authorities, and of the contractors, belong to that class of fat, political mud-worms, whose value as bait for primary meetings, is all that prevents them, on general principles, from being altogether dispensed with by society, and, in certain instances, from being provided with a life asylum, in one of those institutions which the State has benevolently assigned to the use of the "morally insane."

The amount of "moral insanity" which prevailed in the Common Council, previous to the first of January last, had, perhaps, no precedent. We hope that it will not be emulated by the new Boards. Councilmen REILLY and WARNER have abundantly demonstrated, however, that the contagion of corruption is by no means extinct, and the decided vote by which their resolution was referred to the Law Committee, on motion of Mr. HASWELL, cannot be pronounced reassuring for the welfare of the city. No reasonable motive whatever can be assigned why the contracts for cleaning the streets should not be confirmed forthwith, and delay looks like an intention of tampering, in some direction or other, for the sake of gain. Messrs. OTTARSON, HASWELL, and other gentlemen (we believe the majority of the Board) had no other reason for voting for the reference than that they were taken by surprise, and that they were willing to submit to the inquiry whether the contracts were properly made. This was not, we fear, the case with the minority who assented to the reference. We fear that these latter were delighted at any prospect of delay, by which they could make capital for the base and sordid ends of themselves and their friends. We read in an ancient venerable volume, of a personage in high authority in Judea, who, "in hopes that money should have been given him," "sent for often and communed with" one of the heroes of civilization of his time, who chanced to be in his power. Wiser in their generation than many children of light, we deem it not at all uncharitable, to suppose that a cause of much past, present and future refractoriness on the part of some of the old line municipal legislators, is not so much a desire to damage the city as to benefit themselves. If Mr. REYNOLDS and the contractors for the other wards, will "commune" with the minority in the Common Council, who are now so intent upon violating the provisions of the Charter and the recent Statute of the Legislature, and will correspond to their desire that "money should be given to them," we think we can promise them a speedy and unanimous vote. The majority—as we trust the law-abiding members to be—will do right for justice's sake, and the remainder for their own.

Let the Common Council turn, twist, and, if comes to the worst, bark and howl as they may, the contracts for cleaning the streets are signed, and the welfare of the City is being provided for. There is no possibility that the agreement which the Mayor, Comptroller and Mr. EBLING have made, can be evaded, and the contractors will be paid either at once by Mr. FLAGG, or in due process of law, if it should be necessary to resort to the tribunal of the Courts. The thoroughfares of the City are in a better state at the present moment than they have been before for years, although every possible opposition has been offered, not only to Mr. REYNOLDS, in the thirteen Wards under his charge, but also elsewhere. But ten days have elapsed since the streets were next to impassable with mud and filth, and Broadway was more difficult to cross than the river Styx. Ere one week more shall have elapsed, it is promised that the street-sweeping machines of Mr. SMITH shall be employed; the work will have become still more close and thorough, and the frequency with which they are used will render accumulations of filth impossible.

It will be incumbent upon the Press to denounce the contractors whenever they shall prove guilty of any dereliction of duty; but while they are faithful in its performance, they will be sustained by public opinion in whatever way it may declare itself. There is every reason for supposing that it is the maturely-settled plan of Mr. REYNOLDS and of his associates to secure their own future interests, by rendering themselves permanently useful to the City. This is a wise and politic course, which will satisfy the community, benefit themselves, and preserve them harmless from the attacks of Reillys, Warners and their confederates.

Our Coast Defences.

During one of the wildest storms of the past stormy winter, an American ship, the Northern Belle, was driven ashore and utterly wrecked upon the coast of Kent. The hardy seafaring inhabitants of that part of England assembled upon the shore, not to gaze idly on the terrible spectacle before them, but to devise means for rescuing the imperiled crew. The life-boat was manned by volunteers, boatmen of Deal, who contended with one another in their eagerness to rush to the relief of the helpless strangers, through such a surf as landsmen never dream of when they sing the praises of the "wet sheet and the flowing sea" around a cosy supper-table. Three times the gallant fellows fought their way to the ship, till, with a persistent heroism never surpassed before the "imminent deadly breach" or at the "cannon's month," they had wrung the victory from the waves and landed every living soul on board that beleaguered vessel in safety upon the beach.

The details of this most noble achievement stir the heart as with a trumpet; but we have neither the time nor indeed the inclination to dwell upon them here, for the occasion which should have been seized upon by our own people for doing fit honor to the brave Britons who had risked so much and wrought so stoutly in the service of American interests and American lives was suffered to pass us by unimproved, and England was left to pay the meed which we should have claimed it as our right to bestow. We recall the story now only to bring into vivid contrast with it that very different story of the loss of the ship New-Hampshire on the shore of Long Island, which was reported in our yesterday's issue. The New-Hampshire, like the Northern Belle, was an American ship; but it was her more cruel fate to be cast upon her native shores and within sight of one of the "life-stations" by law established for the purpose, as it would appear, of deluding mariners to their destruction. Had she been wrecked in the neighborhood of a mere fishing village where never a life-boat was to be found, we do not doubt that the generous course of the people would have sent help to her in cockleshells, within the first hour of her distress. As it was, however, she stranded within the range of official salvation, and her crew, of course, were left to their own resources. Most fortunately for them the sea, although very heavy, did not run so high as to dash the ship directly to pieces, or to annihilate the boat in which they sought safety. They reached the shore in time to see the keeper of the life-boat emerge from his cheerful residence, and to receive ocular demonstration that it was his intention to visit the ship when the surf should have gone down sufficiently to admit of his making the trip without any great personal inconvenience. If the conduct of the Deal boatmen, who rescued the crew of the Northern Belle, deserved the recompense of oblivion and neglect, it is clear that the course of the Long Island Life-Keeper, who allowed the crew of the New-Hampshire a fair chance of going to the bottom quietly, ought to be rewarded with immediate promotion and a public dinner. The qualities which were displayed on this occasion should commend their possessor to the suffrages of a municipal constituency for one of the highest posts in our City Government, and as the new Charter has made no provision for any alteration in our sanitary system, we entertain a confident hope that he may be called to preside over the health of the Metropolis, in the capacity of City Inspector.

How much of the dangerous and much-frequented coast of Long Island has been confided to the protecting ægis of this considerate guardian, we do not know—but we cannot help thinking that the attention of the Chamber of Commerce might be profitably turned to the examination of the actual condition and working of our Life-Station system. Millions of property and hundreds of human lives float yearly in and out of our harbor, at the mercy of the winds and waves, and we cannot see in what respect the interest of trade can be advanced by the addition to all other nautical risks of such an inefficient life-boat system as is more likely to paralyze the self-helpfulness of endangered crews than to give them succor and encouragement. If the present opportunity shall be turned to the account of a thorough overhauling of our "coast defences," (for such indeed they are, and of more permanent importance than our forts,) we shall not regret the words which we have spent upon the proceedings of a functionary who seems to have carefully modeled himself after the hero of the ancient and ridiculous song in which it is set forth that—

> "There was an old man on the coast,
> Who placidly sat on a post;
> But when it grew cold,
> He relinquished his hold—
> That careless old man on the coast!"

INCREASE OF THE CITY EXPENSES.—The City bills now before the Legislature, which are likely to become laws, will add to the annual taxes, unquestionably, but they may be demanded by a strict regard to economy notwithstanding. The great object is not to save money, but to secure a good government, and the best government is always the cheapest, let the money cost be what it may. The people of this City are not niggardly in public affairs, and what they demand is not cheapness, but efficiency. The security of life and property, efficient sanitary measures, facilities for trade, and the elegancies and refinements which ought to distinguish a great metropolis, are what they demand, and not the saving of a few thousand dollars which, in the end, will cost millions. Whatever expenditure may be necessary to secure an efficient police and a good government will be cheerfully borne by our citizens. Men who pay so lavishly in the decorations of their private dwellings, in beautifying their churches, and building their stores and offices, will not grudge a small increase of their taxation for the sake of clean streets, a magnificent public park, and the benefits of an efficient police. The point to be debated is not what the proposed changes will cost, but whether they be desirable. The public is not like a private individual with a limited income, who must graduate his desires to his means of satisfying them. The public is always able to pay for what it may consider necessary to its safety or enjoyments.

BRIBING THE PRESS.—A spirited lady, who has on several occasions announced her determination to become a great tragic actress, keeps publishing letters in which she insists that the Press can be bought, and that she has the pecuniary power to do it; but, as she also insists that without the "puffing of the Press," it is impossible to achieve success, and, as the only paper that has yet shown any disposition to back up her pretensions, is the one which deals in job-office criticisms, it would appear that she has had no practical experience of the ease with which editorial puffs can be obtained. If some person who has been greatly praised by the papers should announce that the good word of the Press was a purchasable commodity, people would be very likely to believe it; but, for one who has never received any praise from the Press to assert such a thing, is rather suspicious. The best way of proving her statements would be to do what she asserts can be done,—namely, indnce sundry journals to praise her acting. Those only which do so are fairly open to the charge she brings.

Personal.

A young woman who gave the name of HEATH, and said she came from Portland, made her appearance at the Police office in Lowell on Monday, dressed in boy's clothes. She informed the officers that she was not a boy, though she looked like one, but a female in distress, seeking for work and finding none. She came to town to find a girl's situation, but failing in that, tried to find one as a boy. Breaking down in both endeavors, her funds ran short, and she requested to be sent home; which request was complied with.

It is said that a young farmer living near the town of Knox, N. Y., ran away on Sunday with a young lady by the name of HUNT. He left the house while his wife and two children were absent at church. In his hurry to depart he left his pocket-book in "his other pantaloons." On examining the pocket-book, it was found to contain $368, four love letters, and a lock of Miss HUNT's hair, done up in a true-lover's knot.

Obituary.

THOMAS S. RIDGWAY, one of the early pioneers into the Pennsylvania anthracite coal region, died in Gloucester, New-Jersey, on Thursday morning, at the advanced age of 79 years. He was buried at Pottsville, on Sunday last, near the out-croppings of a coal seam. He was one of the early builders in Philadelphia. The round shot-tower in Southwark stands as a monument of his skill and industry.

Professor DELOUTTE, a native of France, but resident in this country for nearly thirty years, during which time he occupied the Chair of Modern Languages in the High School, and Professorships in Girard College and the University of Pennsylvania, died in Philadelphia, on Saturday, after a long and severe illness.

Mr. MICHAEL MINNICH, one of the old defenders of Baltimore, departed this life at the age of 83. Deceased was two years in the service as fifer in Captain SMITHSON'S company, and bore his part at the battle of North Point. He died at a good old age, and respected by all who knew him.

NEW-YORK CITY.

Board of Aldermen.

The Board of Aldermen met as usual on Thursday. The President, Alderman CLANCEY, in the Chair.

INCREASED PAY TO COUNCILMEN AND ALDERMEN.

A debate arose on the presentation of the report of the Committee on Salaries and Officers, in favor of non-concurring with the Board of Councilmen to increase the pay of members of the Common Council to eight dollars per meeting. Alderman WILSON opposed the adoption of the report. "Public opinion," said he, "did not send me here, and therefore I don't care for public opinion. Show by your votes that you are in your opinion entitled to better remuneration. The Legislature has no respect for the feelings of the people of this City, and why should you respect theirs. Vote yourself more salary, spite of what any man says, and especially in spite of country opinion, which issues from a set of farmers.

Alderman TUCKER said the citizens had asked the Legislature to do what they are doing. Ald. WILSON did not care for public opinion—he (Ald. TUCKER) did. In this country public opinion was everything. The Alderman did not mean what he said; his acts proved it. If any officer of the City Government felt dissatisfied, let him resign the office. If a member comes here and does his duty, it will take two-thirds of his time. But who among them did his duty? What was the amount? $3? a month!—not enough to find a man in cigars! He hoped the report of the Committee would be adopted.

Alderman FULLMER felt in duty bound to reply. The Committee on Salaries and Officers were aware what they were doing. To fly in the face of the Legislature would just convince them that the Board were unfit for their duties. As to the salary, if that were the object, not less than $2,500 annum would tempt him. He knew the compensation, and came here to do public duty and to take the reward patriots generally get. Republics are proverbially ungrateful. He was content with what an ungrateful country would award him. The Committee had done what was consistent and clear headed. As to public opinion, he was afraid of no man; the law would sustain him in the fair discharge of his duty. If public opinion frowns a man down, there will soon be little seen of him except his shadow. And he who will openly defy public opinion will have a short career. The Board of Councilmen did what they thought was right. But great men and public bodies frequently differ. He hoped the report would be adopted.

Alderman WILSON had intended to oppose the raising of salaries, until he saw how the Legislature would act. Many members of the Board of Councilmen were poor men, laborers. They could not afford to lose their time. Certainly, they were bound by their contract, but, seeing that the Legislature, now about to turn them out, had broken their contract, why should the Boards be so particular, especially after the expense many of them had incurred. For such reasons he had changed his mind. He thought his opinion just as good as that of a reporter who had picked up his notions in a porter-house. Yet the reporter's fabrications make public opinion. Public opinion was satisfied to pay every man for his services. The public are willing to pay, but we are unwilling to ask for it, just because two or three reporters in the newspapers concoct something which is called public opinion, in ridicule of us.

Alderman JACKSON (Nintu Ward) thought he was bound to fulfill his contract. The Board ought not to do wrong simply because the Legislature had set them the example.

On the question of accepting the report of the Committee, the vote was unanimous, with the exception of Alderman WILSON.

NEW CITY HALL.

The report of the Special Committee in relation to building a new City Hall was ordered to be laid on the table, and printed in the minutes.

CLEANING THE STREETS.

OFFICE COMMISSIONER OF STREETS AND LAMPS,
NEW-YORK, Monday, March 6, 1857.

To the Honorable the Common Council:

GENTLEMEN: In your communication dated March 19, 1857, you will perceive that the lowest bidder for the Eighteenth Ward, the Nineteenth and Twenty-first, and also for the Twentieth and Twenty-second, was Daniel Gallagher. Since that time Mr. Gallagher has peremptorily refused to take the Wards above named at the prices he estimated, except he could have them for the time he first put in the bids, which was on the 19th of January, claiming that he would be entitled to pay from that date, whether he performed the work or not. In consequence of this refusal I allowed the next lowest bidder for the Eighteenth Ward (Christopher Keras) to go on with the work, and would ask that the bids of the said Keras be confirmed instead of said Gallagher. The Nineteenth and Twenty-first Wards, on the same representation of Gallagher, are now in the hands of John Eagan, who was the next lowest bidder. The Twentieth and Twenty-second Wards Mr. Gallagher also refused, and these fields, as Williams Rose is the next lowest bidder. In connection with the above, I would state that I have allowed the parties whose names I tendered to you as the lowest bidders to go on and clean the streets at the prices named in their several bids, subject to your confirmation. I took this course as being the only one left me to perform the duties assigned me in the Street Department, as it was nearly impossible for me to go on with the work without any prospect of receiving the money to pay off the men. Hoping that my action in this matter will meet your approbation, and that you will see fit to confirm the contracts of the several parties,

I remain, yours respectfully,
JOSEPH E. EBLING,
Commissioner of Streets and Lamps.

The communication was referred to the Committee on Cleaning Streets.

APPOINTMENT IN THE TAX OFFICE.

The nomination of Cornelius P. Schermerhorn as first clerk in the office of the Receiver of Taxes was confirmed.

HENRY CLAY'S BIRTHDAY.

The City flags were ordered to be displayed on Henry Clay's birthday, the 13th inst.

COUNSELOR BUSTEED'S OPINION ON CONTRACTS.

A long communication was received from Counsel to the Corporation as to the Battery enlargement, and as to the question whether the contract was legally made, the resolution having passed the Board of Assistant Aldermen in one year and the Board of Aldermen in another. He thinks that it is not only the right but the duty of the Common Council to take prompt measures for completing the work. And to direct the commissioners to advertise for new proposals, so as to enter into a new contract.

Ordered to be laid upon the table and printed.

RAILROAD IN SEVENTH-AVENUE.

A memorial protesting against the passage of a bill for a grant to John Kennedy and others to lay rails through Seventh-avenue, Broadway, Union-place, Canal-street, Fulton-street, Mercer-street, and Waverley-place, was received and adopted.

SEWERS AND FLAGGING.

A great number of papers were acted on in reference to sewers and flagging, which were of no general interest.

ALBANY-STREET.

The Report of the Committee on staying proceedings as to the opening of Albany-street was received. Referred to a Special Committee.

REMONSTRANCE AGAINST THE PASSAGE OF CERTAIN BILLS PENDING IN THE LEGISLATURE.

The following remonstrance was then read:—

To the Legislature of the State of New-York:

The undersigned, the Mayor, Aldermen, and Commonalty of the City of New-York, respectfully represent:—

That under and by virtue of various Charters and Laws confirmed by the present and each of the former Constitutions of the State, and by sundry acts of the Legislature, the Mayor, Aldermen, and Commonalty of the City of New-York, are, and for more than two hundred years have been a body corporate and politic, capable in the law of suing and being sued, of taking, holding, and conveying real and other property, and of exercising, exclusively within the limits and boundaries of the said City, certain rights, franchises, powers and privileges, (Davies Laws, pp. 147 to 214, lb. 218 to 239, lb. 241, and Leg. Act of 1830, ch. 125 § 26; act of 1849, ch. 167 § 28; act of 1853, ch. 217 § 18.) That under and by virtue of the said Charter and Laws, the compass, precincts, circuit, bounds, liberties and jurisdiction of said City reach and extend in and through limits and boundaries following, viz:—Beginning at the river Spyten Dyvel or Harlem river where the said river empties itself into the North river, at low water-mark on the Westchester side thereof, thence running along the said river on the Westchester side at low water-mark to the East River, thence crossing over the East River to low water-mark on Long Island, so as to include Randall's Island, Ward Island, and Blackwall's Island, (formerly Great Barren, Little Barren, and Manning Island,) and thence along the shore of Long Island at low water mark to the south side of Red Hook, thence crossing the North River so as to include Walton Island, Bedtow's Island, Bucking Island, and the Oyster Islands, to the western limits of the State; thence running along the said limits of the State to a point directly opposite Harlem River; and thence to the place of beginning. (Davis' Laws, pp. 165-6, § 1 lb. 220 Chancelor Kent's Notes, 20.3 R. S. p. 2.) That during and ruening through a period of more than two hundred years sundry grants in fee of lands were made to the said Corpartion by the Crown of Great Britain and the Legislature of this State, among which are the following:

All the vacant and unpatented land upon and around Manhattan Island, extending to low-water mark, and all coves, creeks, &c., in the City or Island or either of them, together with all wharves, docks, slips, &c., within the City, with the wharfage, cranage and dockage, and all issues, rents, profits and advantages arising or to arise and accrue by or from all or any of them. (Davies' Laws, p. 149, 58. lb. p. 163, 187 lb. p 216 Chancelor Kent's Note 2.)

2. All the land on Long Island, between high and low water marks, extending from the East side of the wall about to the West side of Red Hook, with like rights of wharfage, cranage, dockage, rents, profits, and advantages. (Davies Laws, p. 192, sec. 37, lb. 219, Chancellor Kents Notes, 18.)

3. Eighty-two and a half acres upon the North River comprised within a line drawn from a point foer hundred feet West of Bestavers Killetje, near what is now Hammersly-street, to a point four hundred feet West of the parade ground, now Battery, together with all and singular, the Benefits, privileges, wharfs, keys, profits, &c., belonging thereto, or that can anywise be had, made, used or enjoyed thereoe, or therewith used with full power and authority to fill, make up, wharf, and lay out all and every part thereof; and the same to build upon and make use of in such manner as the said Mayor, Aldermen, &c., shall think fit. (Davies Laws, p 194. sec. 38.)

4. One hundred and twenty-seven acres comprised within a line drawn from a point four hundred feet east of Coriear's Hook, and thence to a creek forty chains north of Coriear's Hook, together with the same rights as to saying and filling up wharfage, building, using, &c., as to the grant last above mentioned. (Davies, p. 194, sec. 38.)

5. All the lands under the waters of the East and North Rivers, from the northern limits of the two last mentioned grants respectively to Harlem River, extending into the said rivers, four hundred feet from the lands belonging to the City at low water mark. (Davies' Laws, p. 434, sec. 15, lb., p. 676.)

The grants mentioned in this and the next section contained a proviso granting to the owners of adjacent land a preemption right to purchase the four hundred-feet stripe whenever the City should see fit to sell the same, but which proviso your memorialists are advised does not entitle to preemption any persons except those who at the time of such sale by the Corporation shall be the proprietors of the tide way, or the land between high and low water marks.

6. A piece of land, covered by the waters of the North River, extending from Hammond-street to One Hundred and Thirty-fifth-street, and bounded westwardly by the Thirteenth-avenue. (Davies Laws, p. 799.)

The grants mentioned in the above two sections did not, in express terms, convey to the Corporation the right of wharfage, but is a grant of the fee, and it is a principle of common sense, as well as of law, that, when a thing is granted, whatever is necessary to its full enjoyment is granted also. (Justice Story 11, Peters 592, and cases cited by him.)

That an act was passed by the Legislature of this State in 1798, and reënacted in 1813, granting the said Mayor, Aldermen and Commonalty the right and power to lay ent regular streets or wharves of the width of seventy feet in front, of those parts of the said City which adjoin the East and North Rivers, and of each extent along those rivers respectively, as they should think proper, and authorizing and empowering them to lengthen and extend the said streets from time to time, as the building of the City progressed.

This act required the owners of adjacent lands to make and complete such streets or wharves, and to fill in and level the spaces between the same and their lands, and declared that upon so filling up and leveling such spaces, the said proprietors of adjacent lands should become, and be the owners of such spaces in fee-simple, and upon sinking piers outside of such streets or wharves, should become entitled to receive the wharfage to accrue therefrom to their own use. (Davies Laws, pp. 396, 7, 8, § 1, 2, 3, 5, and preamble. lb. 564, 5, 6, § 339, 221, 234.) The judiciary have decided in the cases of Scott vs. Mayor, &c. (1 Carnes R. 543,) and Furman vs. Mayor, &c. (5 Sand'f. R. 16.)

That this act contains a grant to the City, of the right to lay out such exterior streets, and to the adjacent proprietors a grant in fee of the intermediate spaces. That in 1853 another act was passed by the Legislature, authorizing the said Mayor, Aldermen and Commonalty to lay out and fix a permanent exterior street along the shore of the Harlem River in the City of New-York, between the East River and North River, and directing the extension of the streets then existing, to the said exterior street, and permanent line, and vesting the said Mayor, Aldermen and Commonalty, with all the right and title of the people of this State to the lands covered with water along the shores of the said Harlem River, from the East River round to the Hudson River, and extending from low water mark to, and including the said exterior street or permanent line. (Davies laws, p. 1,090.)

That Tompkins and East-streets, from Grand to Twenty-third street, upon the East River, were laid out by the corporation of New-York in 1804, under and in pursuance of the power conferred upon them by the above act of 1798 (1813), and in 1826 an act was passed by the legislature directing and declaring that Tompkins and East-streets should be the permanent exterior streets of the City there, and further enacting and declaring that all grants made or to be made by the said Mayor, Aldermen and Commonalty should be construed as rightfully made to extend thereto, and that all the provisions of the said act of 1813 (1798) should be construed to apply to Tompkins and East streets. (Davies Laws, p. 677.)

That, in 1835, another act was passed by the Legislature, granting to the said Mayor, Aldermen and Commonalty, power to adopt such plan as they should deem most expedient for the resolution, and laying out of that part of the said City which lies between Thirteenth and Twenty-third streets, the First avenue and the East River, and to designate and direct where the permanent exterior line or street to the eastward of such part of the said City shall be, in place of that part of Tompkins-street. (Devies' Laws, p. 782.)

That in December, 1856, a street was laid out and adopted by the said Mayor, Aldermen and Commonalty, outside of Tompkins street, and extending to Thirty-eighth-street, in pursuance of the provisions of the said last-mentioned act and the said act of 1813, and the owners of the opposite and nearest lands were duly required to make such exterior street, and to fill in the spaces between the same and their said lands, and have, at least in some instances, commenced doing so.

That previous to the laying out of the street last mentioned, the said Mayor, Aldermen and Commonalty had conveyed to divers persons portions of the land under water between Thirteenth and Thirty-eighth streets, and extending from high water mark to the then exterior streets upon the river, as well as of various portions and parcels of land under water so granted to the said City as aforesaid; and that the said Mayor, Aldermen and Commonalty are, and yet remain the owners in fee of other portions and parcels of the lands between Thirteenth and Thirty-eighth streets, and elsewhere, so granted to them as aforesaid, of the value of many millions of dollars.

And your memorialists claim for and on behalf of the said Corporation, that the said Mayor, Aldermen, and Commonalty, and the other owners of property between Thirteenth and Thirty-eighth streets, are entitled respectively to fill up, and become the owners in fee of the spaces between their several lands, and the said exterior street so laid ont and established in place of Tompkins-street, and to collect and receive wharfage upon, and in front thereof.

That so far as your memorialists have been informed, or have reason to believe, no street, wharf, pier, or other erection of any kind, has ever been erected or built by the said Corporation, or by any person holding under or through them, outside of the line of the grants so made to the said Mayor, Aldermen and Commonalty, and of the exterior street so authorized by and laid out and established under and by virtue of the said act of 1813 and 1835.

That as your memorialists are advised and believe, the lands, rights, privileges and franchises, so granted to the said Mayor, Aldermen and Commonalty by the said charters and acts, cannot be interfered with or impaired by the Legislature, or by any officers of the Government of the State, without compensation or the consent of the said Corporation, and other persons in whom rights have become vested, except by a violation of that part of the Constitution of the State which declares that "No person shall be deprived of his property without due process of law, nor shall private property be taken for public use without compensation." (Const. of 1846, act 1, § 6.) And by a like violation of the Constitution of the United States, which declares that "No law impairing the obligation of contracts shall be passed by any State." (Const. of United States, act 1, § 10.) In the language of Judge Story, "The Legislature may, by a law, directly make a grant, and such grant, when once made, becomes irrevocable, and cannot constitutionally be impaired." A grant implies the extinguishment of the title of the grantor, and implies a contract not to reassert it." (Story on Constitution, § 706, and §§ 692, 698.) It is upon the principles, as is said by Justice McLean, in Charles River Bridge Case, (11 Peters, 575,) that "the grantor can do nothing that shall destroy the deed;" which rule applies as well to a State as to an individual, and operates with equal force on all grants, whether made by a State or an individual.

That under and in pursuance of the grants contained in the said Charter and the said act of 1798, the said Mayor, Aldermen and Commonalty, several years since, caused a pier to be erected in the North River, opposite Washington Market, then and now belonging to the said City; that about one-half of the said pier stands upon the land granted to the said Corporation aforesaid, (Davies' Laws, p. 194, § 38,) and of which they are the owners in fee, and that the remainder of such pier was so sunk and made by the said Corporation, under and in pursuance of the grant and power conferred upon them by the said acts of 1798 and 1813. (Ib., p. 398, § 5.)

That notwithstanding the said pier has been so sunk and built as aforesaid, your memorialists have learned with surprise and regret that a resolution has been introduced into the Senate, with a view to its passage, directing the Attorney-General to commence proceedings against the said Mayor, Aldermen and Commonalty, for the recovery of the said pier as the property of the State.

That notwithstanding the grants to the said Mayor, Aldermen and Commonalty, of the land upon Long Island extending to low-water mark, with the rights of wharfage upon and in front thereof, as aforesaid, and although all the waters and lands under the waters of the East River outside of low-water mark, upon Long Island, from the said portion Harlem River opposite Washington, are within the limits and jurisdiction of the City of New-York, and notwithstanding the Commissioners of the Land Office are by law, expressly prohibited from making any grants whatever, extending beyond any exterior water line established by law, or which will interfere with any property, rights or franchises of the said Corporation, (Laws of p. 621.)

Your memorialists have learned that said Commissioners of the Land Office have made many grants, in fee, of lands under the waters of the East River, outside of the said line of tow water, and extending so far into the said river as seriously to obstruct navigation, contract the channel of the East River, and impair the value of the lands and franchises so granted to the said Corporation as aforesaid.

That notwithstanding the said grants of land, franchises and rights, your memorialists have learned that under an act passed in 1853, intitled: "An act" for the appointment of Commissioners for the preservation of the Harbor of New-York from encroachments, &c., (Davis' Laws, p. 1186,) five persons, none of whom are residents of this City, but of whom two reside in Westchester and Kings Counties, whose interests are directly adverse to those of the City of New-York, have been appointed Commissioners to designate and report to the Legislature proper exterior lines around the island of New-York, and along the Long Island shore, beyond which erections ought not to be permitted to be made.

That the said Commissioners, upon a pretended examination of the harbor of New-York, have recommended, and a bill founded thereupon has been introduced into the Legislature providing for, the adoption of an exterior line or limit around Manhattan Island and along the Long Island shore, within the limits and jurisdiction of this City, and prohibiting the erection of streets or wharves outside of such exterior lines, either by the said Mayor, Aldermen and Commonalty, or others. That the said line around Manhattan Island is so drawn that, for more than 29 miles upon the Hudson, East and Harlem Rivers, it runs within the exterior limits of the lands so granted to the said Mayor, Aldermen and Commonalty as aforesaid, and that, if the act establishing such contemplated line and prohibition shall be passed, the said Mayor, Aldermen and Commonalty, and the persons to whom they have made conveyances as aforesaid, will unconstitutionally be deprived of property belonging to them in fee, by the taw of the land, of the value of many millions of dollars, or such owners will of necessity be compelled to commence proceedings which will result in protracted end expensive litigation, and to the disturbance and unsettling of titles, to the inevitable great injury of all such owners, of the said City, and consequently of the State itself.

That the said bill, thus introduced, provides for the erection of a sea wall from Thirty-eighth street to Seventeenth-street, a distance of one mile, with openings four hundred and fifty feet apart, and directs that the whole water space, embracing an area of not less than 80 acres, where no vessels above the smallest class can possibly lie, shall be appropriated for piers on piles, or blocks and bridges, and wet basins. That the said provisions, if adopted, will not merely deprive the said Mayor, Aldermen and Commonalty of their vested rights, but the erection of the sea wall will cause the so-called wet basins to be filled up, and will make them receptacles for the filth and impurities which must there accumulate, to the certain injury of the health of the inhabitants of the City.

That the said line between Thirty eighth and Seventeenth streets is so located by the said bill, that if an exterior wall with openings shall be built thereupon, as provided for by the bill which is now before the Legislature, the main current of the East River, running to the westward of Blackwell's Island, will be impinging against such wall thrown across to the Brooklyn side, and will thence continue along that side for more than a mile, and will, necessarily, cause the channel upon the New-York Shore to be filled up for an equal distance; the effect of which will be to cause all large ships to use the Brooklyn side, while nothing but market boats and other small vessels will be able to reach the wharves of New-York. The City of New-York will thus be deprived, arbitrarily, of the wharfage of all large vessels, from Thirty-eighth-street to Coriaer's Hook, a distance of more than 2 miles and a half, opposite which the City is fully built up and densely populated from river to river, and it is easy to see that the injury to this City and the grantees of the Corporation who are now owners of lands upon the East River will be incalculable. That so far as your memorialists have been able to perceive or discover, no good reason has been or can be given for the enactment of a bill with effect this injustice. For while the line upon the New-York side between Seventeenth and Twenty-third streets runs where the water is only from 13 to 17 feet in depth upon an average, it is upon the Brooklyn side, located where the river is from 45 to 55 feet deep.

That, notwithstanding the said grants and franchises, and also the jurisdiction and boundaries of the City of New-York now existing, and for a period of more than 200 years have extended, to low water mark on the Westchester and Long Island sides of the Harlem and East Rivers, and so far south and west as to include the waters of the Bay and its Islands, and notwithstanding the confirmations contained in the said constitution and acts, your memorialists have been informed that for the first time within the said period of 200 years, an attempt is now being made before the Legislature to abridge the said jurisdiction and boundaries so as to limit the same to Manhattan Island itself, and otherwise to affect, abridge and impair the said chartered and constitutional rights, privileges and franchises of the said corporation, and that, too, without the assent of the said Mayor, Aldermen and Commonalty, or of the inhabitants of the said City; and that to accomplish the said object, a bill entitled "An act to amend the Charter of the City of New-York" has been presented to the Legislature and is now pending there, the fiftieth section of which divides the said City into Wards and declares that the boundaries thereof shall only extend to the Rivers, thus excluding the bay, all the islands, the lands to low water mark on the Westchester and Long Island sides of the East and Harlem Rivers, and possibly the wharves of New-York.

Wherefore your memorialists, the Mayor, Aldermen and Commonalty of the City of New-York, respectfully pray:

First—That the said Corporation may be left to that quiet enjoyment of their rights, privileges, franchises, and property which is expressly guaranteed to them in and by their said Charters, and the Constitution of this State, (Davies' Laws, pp. 196-6, §§ 39, 40. lb., p. 238. Kent's Notes. 21-2.)

Second—That the resolution directing the Attorney-General to commence a suit for the recovery of the said pier in front of Washington Market, may not be passed. Under the present laws, it is the duty of the Attorney-General to institute such action if he is satisfied that the State is entitled to the possession of the land, and certainly he ought not to be compelled to bring such suit in the face of the fact that the State has no title.

Third—That proceedings may be had on the part of the State for setting aside the grants which have been made by the Commissioners of the Land Office within the boundaries of the City of New-York; and that such a law may be enacted as will effectually prevent the making of such grants hereafter, without the assent of the said Mayor, Aldermen and Commonalty.

Fourth—That the bill providing for the establishment of the said exterior line may be rejected; or, that the line recommended by the Harbor Commissioners may be so far modified and changed as not to divest the said Corporation, or the grantees of property which belongs to them in fee, of the rights, privileges and franchises so secured and guaranteed to them by the said Charters, Constitutions and laws.

Or if the Legislature shall deem it necessary or proper to take the property of the said Corporation and citizens of New York for public use, then your memorialists, in behalf of the said Corporation and citizens, respectfully ask that suitable provision be made in the said bill, in accordance with the requirements of the Constitution, for the payment of such damages as shall be sustained by them.

Fifth—That the said bill providing for the amendment of the said Charter may be rejected, or so far modified as to preserve the property franchises, rights and privileges of the said City and its citizens, the Mayor, Aldermen and Commonalty of the City of New-York.

Resolved, That the foregoing memorial be transmitted to the Governor, the Senate and the Assembly of this State.

Ald. TUCKER said it was a very interesting document truly, but neither he nor any one present could comprehend a word of what had been uttered. It came in, pressed at a late hour, just as the Board was adjourning. The thing was off its place with other matters; if the Legislature thought the Board monopolized all the sense in the world, they were awfully mistaken; such a dry legal document was unintelligible, and time ought to be taken to comprehend it. He would vote against it.

Alderman FULLMER—If the document must go to Albany at all, no time must be lost. They are legislating there for Brooklyn and Williamsburg, and the City of New-York may go to the devil. The Harbor Commission will be law by Saturday unless something be done. If no remonstrance be sent, the House will have nothing to act on. He hoped the resolution would be sent to the Legislature forthwith.

Alderman TUCKER said, in reply, that whoever votes for this long rigmarole, votes for something he knows nothing about. The thing would do more harm than good. He hoped it would not be adopted to-night.

On vote, 12 members were found in the affirmative—4 in the negative. Adopted.

Adjourned to Monday, at 5 o'clock.

Board of Supervisors.

At 4 o'clock, yesterday, the Board of Supervisors met in the City Hall, His Honor, the Mayor presiding.

A report of the Committee on County Offices was presented in favor of paying the bill of SOLOMON KIPP, amounting to $1120 83 for supplies of groceries and coals furnished to Eldridge-street Jail, during the quarter ending March 31, 1857, which was adopted.

A bill of $396 from LEWIS BLOOD for books furnished to Judge RUSSELL'S office, was referred.

The bill of JAMES C. WILLET, Sheriff, amounting to $2,458 15, for the quarter ending March, was also referred.

A report in favor of paying W. BLOOMFIELD, stationer, $648 50 for books for the County Clerk's office was adopted.

Some other bills for advertising, were also acted upon.

The Coroners' accounts, amounting to $3,394 90, audited by the Comptroller, were presented and referred to the Committee on County Officers.

The Board then adjourned to Monday.

Stabbing Affray—Probable Homicide.

A very serious affray occurred about 9 o'clock yesterday morning, at the Merchants' Hotel, Cortlandt-street, between two men named JAMES H. CHEESE and ROBERT H. LITTEL. The parties are mercantile solicitors, or drummers—the former being in the employ of WM. G. LANE & Co., of No. 194 Broadway, and the latter in that of WM. R. BARWISE & Co., No. 84 Vesey-street. They met accidentally in the office of the Hotel, when angry words arose between them, in reference to some difficulty which they had previously had. Blows were given, or attempted to be given, when LITTEL drew a dirk and attempted to stab CHEESE, who retreated through the office and into the dining-room. LITTEL pursued, and, closing with CHEESE, stabbed him, twice—once in the face, and once in the side.

The whole affair was so quickly done that the spectators had not time to interfere. CHEESE was conveyed to an adjoining room, where medical aid was called. Both wounds were found to be of a very serious nature. The one in the side so much so as to excite fears that it would result fatally. LITTEL was immediately arrested by the two Ward Policemen, who conveyed him before Justice OSBORNE, by whom he was committed to the Tombs.

Fatal Accident on the Hudson River Railroad.

A man named JOHN BOYLE, a fireman on the engine "Cumberland," was instantly killed yesterday, near Riverdale, by being run over by the cars. He was in the act of shoveling coal into the furnace, when the connecting rod between the engine and tender suddenly parted, precipitating him over backwards on the track, and the whole train passed over him, crushing and mutilating his body in a horrible manner. He has been employed on the road for a long time in the capacity of a fireman, and was esteemed by all who knew him. We understand he leaves a family.

Fatal Result.

KARL SLIDELL, the young German emigrant who, while in despair on account of destitution, took arsenic, and was afterwards found sleeping in a new building on Broadway, died about 4 o'clock yesterday morning, at the Fifteenth Ward Station-house. Coroner PERRY held an inquest upon the body. The evidence did not bring to light any new facts, and the Jury rendered a verdict of "Suicide by taking arsenic." The deceased was only 20 years of age. Several German gentlemen have interested themselves in behalf of the surviving brother, and will procure him employment.

☞ From Justice NELSON'S charge yesterday, we are happy to believe that we are to have a repetition of the Fillibuster Farce which has had so fine a run this Spring. The greater dignity of the Court may possibly spoil the fun.

LONG ISLAND.

Significant.

The Congregational Association of New-York and Brooklyn held their annual meeting at Clinton-avenue Church, Brooklyn, Wednesday and Thursday.

Rev. Dr. CHEEVER delivered a powerful discourse on Tuesday evening before the Association; subject, "The Power of the Pulpit, particularly as dependent on its Boldness and Freedom from Bondage to Sects and Associations, Pews and Creeds."

The same day, we are told, Rev. Mr. HATCH, of Brooklyn, who has recently made himself famous by publicly advocating social amusements and Sunday cars, expressed to them his desire of joining the body, but the body declined to consider the question of his becoming a member.

Steam on Atlantic-street.

In your valuable journal of the 8th inst., was a City item doing (no doubt unintentional) injustice to a subject which interests South Brooklyn.

This is the removal of steam locomotives, manufacturing cars and tunnel from one of our principal streets, and the main ferry street of South Brooklyn.

It was unjust, because the subject is in Committee of the Common Council, and their report is not yet made to that body.

It is true, "it will continue to disturb us until its removal," and "no new excitement will displace it." You state that "it probably always will wrong some," (an admission that wrong is done.) But in justification of such wrong, it is stated a tunnel was built, that it was authorised to be thus built by the City and State. Not a finger can be pointed to any act of this State, authorizing such construction. Simply an ordinance of the Common Council did it, and then against petitions, remonstrances and contrasties of our citizens. The solemn compromise upon vacation was no compromise. No citizen interested would compromise this question. As well might the Tartars and Chinese compromise the English difficulties, or Mexico and Missouri the Kansas.

The fact is the Railroad never obtained the right of way, which they must by their charter; they have never compensated the owners on the street for any part of it. The street was ceded by the owners of the lots for a street, and nothing else; the city had no right to give away a right in any part of it. The Railroad has obstructed a public highway, in an unwarranted manner, by making a tunnel, and placing the long fences along its mouths. In the Broadway Railroad decision, the City of New-York could not give permission to a Company to use its street, although it was admitted that the City held the fee of the street, the property on each side never having owned it, as it was the old road or King's highway.

This railroad, occupying the principal street of South Brooklyn from its ferry, cuts off all accommodation by city cars; the whole of our people are interested in this; real estate feels it. The only omnibus line was driven off the street by the railroad, and now there is no public conveyance from the ferry. Must the thousands be compelled to submit to inconvenience to accommodate the few who desire a few minutes speedier communication with the island, or cannot these few ride in city cars to the depôt from all the ferries? Cannot our citizens have cars hourly to Jamaica, half hourly to East New York, and at the landing af every boat for Bedford, Flatbush-avenue, Greenwood, Fulton-avenue, Myrtle-avenue, Green Point, &c., connecting with the city cars already running? THE VOICE OF THE PEOPLE.

"Our types said "wrong"—we said "worry."

TO THE STOCKHOLDERS OF THE GALENA AND CHICAGO UNION RAILROAD COMPANY.—The Board of Directors of the Galena and Chicago Union Railroad Company passed the following resolution on the 24th inst:

Resolved, That the balance of the second mortgage bonds of this Company (about $1,000,000) remaining unsold on the 1st day of May next, be offered to the stockholders of the Company until that date, at seventy-five cents on the dollar, each Stockholder being at liberty to subscribe for as many $1,000 bonds as he may choose, without reference to the amount of stock held by him; but should such subscriptions amount in the aggregate to more than the amount of bonds unsold on the 1st day of May next, the same shall be apportioned among the subscribers in as equitable a manner as the circumstances of the case will admit of, reference being had to the amount of stock owned by each on that day.

Subscribers will be required to pay for the bonds awarded them respectively, at the office of Messrs. Strachan & Scott, in the City of New-York, or at the office of the Secretary of the Company, in Chicago, Illinois, in drafts on New-York at par, or their equivalent, as follows:

25 per cent. on the 1st day of June next.
25 per cent. on the 20th day of June next.
25 per cent. on the 20th day of July next.
25 per cent. on the 1st day of Sept. next.

Any subscriber may be entitled to receive, from time to time, such number of bonds as the payments made will cover; the coupons and interest on payments to be equitably adjusted, as is customary.

All subscriptions for bonds must be forwarded to the Secretary of the Company, at Chicago, Illinois, and no subscriptions received after the 1st day of May next will be recognized.

The bonds offered in accordance with the foregoing resolution, are the second mortgage sinking fund bonds of this Company, for $1,000 each, with coupons of $65 each attached, payable on the 1st days of May and November of each year at the American Exchange Bank in the City of New-York, and the principal reimbursable on the 1st day of May 1867, at the same place.

Annexed hereto you will find a blank subscription paper, which you are requested to fill with such number of the bonds as you desire, and to return the same to the undersigned, at this office, without delay.

Office of the Galena and Chicago Union Railroad Company, Chicago, March 25, 1857.

W. M. LARRABEE, Secretary.

FOR SALE—FOR PERMANENT INVESTMENT. 8-per-cent. City and County Bonds. The undersigned offers for sale the following securities:

$15,000 Hancock County (Ill.) 8-per-cent. Bonds, dated July 1, 1856, and redeemable at the American Exchange Bank, in New-York, July 1, 1876; interest coupons payable annually, on the 1st day of July, $1,000 each.

$10,000 Warsaw City (Ill.) 8-per-cent. Bonds, dated May 1, 1856, and due at the American Exchange Bank, in New-York, May 21, 1876; interest coupons payable Jan. and July 1, $1,000 each.

The above Bonds were issued in conformity with an Act of the State Legislature, authorizing the issue of Bonds to aid in the construction of the Warsaw and Rockford Railroad. The amount of taxable property in the County, for the year 1856, was $6,308,949; taxes, $73,698; population, about 25,000; area in acres, 483,840. The authority to issue by the County is 5 per cent. The amount of taxable property in the city is $1,000,000; taxes, $8,050; population, 3,400. The authorized issue by the city is $50,000, and no more can be issued, by either the city or County, without an Act by the Legislature, and sanctioned by the people, so that every precaution has been taken to make these Bonds unquestionable, in point of security, and they cannot be repudiated, under any circumstances. Hancock County is one of the most prosperous in the State, and is expected that 50 miles of the Warsaw railroad, from Warsaw to Quawka Junction, will be finished and in full operation in sixty days from the present time. I have fully examined the strength of these securities, and I can recommend them to my friends and the public, with the utmost confidence, believing that they will compare with anything in the market, and, for a permanent investment, no safer Bonds can be found. For full particulars, apply to

THE NEW POLICE BILL.

Provisions of the Bill Establishing a Metropolitan Police.

SECTION 1. New-York, Kings, Westchester and Richmond are made "the Metropolitan Police District." The Governor may appoint five Commissioners of Police, who, together with the Mayors of Brooklyn and New-York, ex officio, shall form the Board of Police for said District. A majority shall constitute a quorum.

SEC. 2. Three Commissioners shall be appointed from New-York, one from Kings, and one from either Richmond or Westchester. The persons first appointed shall draw lots among themselves for three terms of office—three to go out on 1st May, 1858; three on 1st May, 1859, and one 1st May, 1860. Appointments thereafter to be for three years. Vacancies shall be filled from the county in which they occur. Any vacancy shall be filled by the Board for the unexpired term. Any Commissioner who shall accept any other place, or receive any nomination for an elective office, without publicly declining within ten days succeeding, shall thereby vacate his office. Any Commissioner may be removed by the Governor, as in the case of Sheriffs.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of State shall administer the oath of office; whereupon the Commissioners may organize themselves and assume control of the Police.

SEC. 4. The officers of the Board shall be a President and a Treasurer, each to be a Commissioner. The Board may appoint a Chief Clerk and six Deputy Clerks, who shall hold office at the pleasure of the Board. The principal office is to be located by the Commissioners—the Superintendent of Police to have office accommodation in the same building. The office accommodation for the two Deputy Superintendents to be at the discretion of the Commissioners, except that one be in Brooklyn.

SEC. 5. It shall be the duty of the Board to preserve the public peace, to prevent crime and arrest offenders, to protect the rights of persons and of property, to protect the public health, to preserve order at every public election, to remove nuisances, to provide a proper police force at every fire, to protect strangers and travelers at steamboat and ship landings and railway stations, to see that all laws relating to the observance of Sunday, and regarding pawnbrokers, mock auctions, emigrants, elections, gambling, intemperance, lottery policies, vagrants, disorderly persons, and the public health are promptly enforced, and to obey and enforce all ordinances of Common Councils and other local authorities.

SEC. 6. The duties of the Board shall be executed by a police force for the whole of the district, and authorized to do duty in any part thereof. The force shall be a general superintendent, 2 deputy superintendents, 5 surgeons, 40 inspectors, 150 sergeants, and as many patrolmen as the Boards of Supervisors may authorize, until otherwise provided; the patrol force of the Counties of New-York and Kings to be the same as at present. The officers of police shall be appointed by the Board—each person to hold office only during such time as he shall faithfully observe and execute all the rules and regulations of the Board, the laws of the State and local ordinances.

SEC. 7. The qualifications, enumeration and distribution of duties, mode of trial and removal of each officer, shall be defined by rules of the Board, in accordance with the Constitution and law of the State; but no person shall be so appointed to office, or hold office in the police force aforesaid, who cannot read and write the English language, or is not a citizen of the United States, or has not resided within the district during five years next preceding his appointment, or has ever been convicted of crime; and no person to be removed except upon written charges and after opportunity of defence. Vacancy as inspector to be filled from the sergeants, and offices of sergeants to be filled by patrolmen.

SEC. 8. The police shall possess, in every part of the State, all the powers of constables, except for the service of civil process; and any warrant for search or arrest, issued by any magistrate of the State, may be executed in any part of the State by any member of the said police, without any backing or endorsement of the warrant. The superintendents and inspectors, having just cause to suspect any felony in any building or vessel within the district, may enter the same at all hours of the day and night, to take measures for prevention or detection, and may take all persons suspected and all property believed to have been stolen.

SEC. 9. If the general superintendent report in writing to the Board that there are good grounds for believing any room to be used as a gaming house, and if two householders shall make oath before any one of the Commissioners that the premises complained of are said to be so kept, any Commissioner may authorize a Superintendent to enter the premises by force and arrest all persons, and destroy all tables, &c., found therein. If there be cause for believing that such persons were in such premises for the purpose of gaming, the Magistrate before whom they are taken shall hold them to bail with two good sureties, or in default commit them for trial. The Magistrate shall send the proofs to the District Attorney who shall lay it before the grand jury of the county, and upon indictment try the same in preference to every other case. If the jury are satisfied that the premises were kept for the purposes of gaming, then the defendant may be convicted as a common gambler. If convicted the court shall forthwith sentence to not less than ten days in the jail, or penitentiary not exceeding one year, at hard labor, or to a fine not less than $250 nor more than $1,000. The phrase "purposes of gaming," shall be taken to mean any purpose of playing for money or any game of chance. It shall promulgate all orders through the general superintendent, who shall take the place of the Mayor of New-York and Brooklyn, as being at the head of the police force in the said cities, but always subject to the orders of the board, and the police shall obey the Superintendent as the chief of the same.

The Board may, on the application of any person, swear any additional number of patrol men at the expense of the person by whom the application is made, the men to wear such emblem as the Board may direct. The persons so appointed may be removed at any time by the Board without assigning cause, upon one month's notice. The Board may also, upon any riot, pestilence, invasion, election, or celebration, appoint as many special men, without pay, as it may deem advisable, and for a specified time.

LIGHTNING-RODS VERSUS PROTECTION FROM LIGHTNING.

There are at this time various parties engaged in vending several kinds of patent insulated lightning-rods, relying upon the popular prejudice in favor of glass insulators and upon the certificates of a few professional men.

Occasionally they make an unwarranted use of some more eminent names, such as that of Prof. SILLIMAN*, of New-Haven, and others.

In dealing with persons aware of the reputation of Quimby's Lightning-Conductors, these parties affirm for their own purposes that the insulated rods they sell are a new invention superseding QUIMBY'S, and that the latter have failed to afford protection from lightning, giving alleged instances of this, always in some distant place.

These statements are utterly and unqualifiedly false, and if made by responsible parties, would subject them to legal penalties.

The subscribers discarded glass insulators many years since, and experience has justified them in so doing, as well as in the adoption of those principles upon which their rods of protection from lightning is based.

Having studied this subject practically for many years with very perfect means and appliances for investigation, and with entire success as to results, the undersigned do not conceive it necessary to procure any indorsement of their views—nevertheless, it is proper to say that many of the more distinguished electricians in the world, including FARADAY and ARAGO, have agreed in considering insulation useless, while some go farther and believe it an injury.

The subscribers are ready and able to satisfy any one interested on this point.

The frequency with which buildings have been injured by lightning, notwithstanding the patent insulated rods upon them, clearly proves that no rule or set of rules can be given which will enable every one to put up lightning rods so as to insure protection. It proves that the rod must be adapted to meet the peculiar circumstances of each case, to do which requires knowledge and experience.

The undersigned point to the uniform success of their mode of protection as demonstrative evidence that they have acquired this knowledge and experience which is so essential.

Lightning rods improperly constructed and applied endanger more than they protect, and it may be safely said that this is the case with nine-tenths of the insulated rods now in use.

These rods are very clumsily put up, often disfiguring buildings very much, and as a rule, they break apart and fall to pieces within a year or two after they are erected.

On the contrary, the rods erected by the subscribers are substantial and are very neatly applied, as the principal architects in the City will certify, and the result of the test to which they have been subjected proves that they fully deserve the reputation they have acquired as complete safeguards from lightning.

No. 119 Nassau-street, New-York.

TO THE CITIZENS OF NEW-YORK:
London Cordial Gin,
Medicated Schnapps,
London Club-House Gin,
Schiedam Schnapps.
CAUTION TO THE PUBLIC.

After several years experimenting in the manufacture of gin, I fortunately succeeded, in the year 1849, in making a discovery in its manufacture by which it was deprived of its acrid and inflammatory properties, and rendered perfectly pure.

My manufactory is at Schiedam, Holland. After several months reflection what title to give it, I introduced it to the American public under the title of "WOLFE'S SCHIEDAM AROMATIC SCHNAPPS." Schiedam is the name of the place in Holland where the gin is manufactured; "aromatic" derives its name from the Italian juniper berry with which it is flavored, and the word "Schnapps" is the German for drink—cogne dram—Wolfe's Schiedam aromatic drink. No sooner had my schnapps been introduced to the American public, and received with approbation, than the liquor-mixers of New-York, Boston, and Philadelphia started in pursuit, with their mixed and poisonous stuff, under various names—Schiedam gin, Schiedam schnapps, London Club-House gin, London cordial gin, medicated schnapps, &c.—and in several instances my labels have been so perfectly imitated, with only the addition of a few letters to plead a technical avoidance of the law, and so carefully prepared, as to impose on careless purchasers. I understand a large quantity has been purchased by the merchants of the Southern and Western States, on account of the cheapness of the article. A merchant who participates indirectly in the fraud, by selling the spurious article, is as much an offender as the principal who planned the imposition.

I hope every respectable citizen who values his health of the community in which he lives, will aid me in ferreting out and exposing the unscrupulous merchant who, for the sake of a few cents, will put in jeopardy the lives of the community in which he lives. Such men should be nailed to the pillory of popular execration. UDOLPHO WOLFE,

We have no changes to note in the Money or Exchange matters from the report of yesterday. The tendency is to ease in the supply of means for temporary employment. At Bank, the offerings of paper, though still pretty full compared with the incoming payments, are not so large as last week. With the Discount brokers prime selections of paper command money readily at 8@9 ₱ cent. The Sub-Treasury received to-day $118,267; paid $115,553, and held at the close $15,124,847. The Stock Market showed some animation at the early Board on the improved prices of yesterday afternoon, and a heavy business done in most of the Railroads at a further advance of ⅛@¾ ₱ cent. on Erie and some of the Western shares. In the afternoon a renewed attack was made upon the market by the speculators for the fall, and this was especially marked on Erie, the Bonds as well as the Shares of which were offered at a decline. The former, of course, sold down in small parcels, to influence the larger contracts in the latter. Sinking Funds of 1875 were done at 90¾, and Convertibles of 1871 at 75 ₱ cent.; Shares, 51⅛, from 52¼ in the morning. Illinois Centrals, Bonds and Scrip, were firmer. Reading, after being offered down to 77¾, closed 78 bid. Southern Michigan, 68, and Toledo, 68⅜, at the close, about the same as yesterday afternoon. New-York Central receded to 86⅛@87.

Increase this year	$2,598

The first practical result of the plan adopted on the reorganization of the finances of the New-York and Erie Company, of sinking the Funded Debt of the concern by its conversion into shares, is seen in the Scrip Dividend declared yesterday by the Board of Directors. The appropriation of cash income to this object was thought at the time to be an extravagant one—being $35,000 ₱ month or $420,000 a year, equal to 4.20 ₱ cent. on the Capital of ten millions. But the purpose was a landable one, to wit, to enable the Directors to renew the Funded Debt falling due on 1st of February, 1855, and to fund part of the floating obligations of the Company on the best possible terms. This purpose was defeated by reason of the systematic attacks in 1854 upon the value of the property, and the discredit which had fallen upon the stock in consequence. The Sinking Fund plan, large as it was, could not save the Company from the loss of 20 ₱ cent., or $800,000 on the new loan of 1875. It has nevertheless, been faithfully carried out through the agency of the United States Trust Company, who now hold $1,094,500 of the Bonds of 1875, bought in for account of the Stockholders, by the contribution of fourteen months to the Sinking Fund. The principal of these Bonds, to the amount of one million of dollars, has been canceled, and shares to the same amount substituted. The coupons remain in trust for accumulation, as part of the future income for division among the stockholders, together with the continued contribution of $35,000 ₱ month in cash. A second scrip dividend will follow one year hence, when $550,000 in the Bonds of 1875, or five ₱ cent. on the enlarged capital of $11,000,000 will be canceled and new shares substituted. There is no question that the accumulation with the Trust Company will exceed that sum, since a surplus of $94,500 is now carried forward, and the subsequent purchases must be made at or under par. In case the Bonds of 1875 should rise above par in the market, the Trustee will fall back upon the Bonds of 1871. The process continues until the total funded debt of the Company now standing out, $23,756,500, is reduced to $20,000,000. This debt consists of:

First mortgage due in 1869	$3,000,000
Second, renewable in 1859	4,000,000
Third, due in 1883	6,000,000
Convertible Loan due 1862	2,500,000
Convertible Loan due 1871	4,851,000
Sinking Fund of 1875, reduced to	3,905,500
Total Funded Debt Erie Road	$23,756,500

The third mortgage of 1883 is made for ten millions, and becomes the second mortgage after 1859, when the Bonds then falling due will be paid with the reserve of four millions of the 1883 mortgage.

The United States Economist says the country appears to have a way of its own in going forward, prospering and to prosper, notwithstanding the stereotyped cry of rack and ruin from such journalists as the New-York Herald—seven times fulminated in as many years since the first infusion of California Gold. The truth of this remark is singularly illustrated, at the present moment, even in the midst of the seeming success of the Herald in enlisting the help of Wall-Street to crush out all Railway values. Good men and wealthy are still found to push forward this great system in the direction of the Pacific. The eligible routes across the virgin plains of Iowa and Missouri will be taken up; and the Congress of the United States have not been indifferent to their success, but granted large donations from the Public Domain to their encouragement. We have but recently had occasion to review the progress of the Missouri Railroads. Yesterday reference was made to one of the Iowa routes, taken up by a party of well known capitalists in Boston, Albany, &c. This is one of four contemplated lines across that State, and one of three which have been energetically entered upon. The Mississippi and Missouri Company were the first in the field, under the administration of Hon. JOHN A. DIX, President, and under contracts for building the Road, with Messrs. FARNHAM, DURANT, and others, who built the Rock Island. The Dubuque and Pacific Company is fully organized, and without the slightest noise through the press, have made progress in their negotiations, founded upon the land grant of Congress, to the extent, we hear, of at least six million dollars. Some of the best friends of the Illinois Central interest, on both sides the Atlantic, are understood to be engaged in the enterprize. The City of Dubuque made the earliest subscription of $400,000 in 10 ₱ cent. Bonds, the whole of which were s

VOL. VI.....NO. 1785. NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, APRIL 11, 1857. PRICE TWO CENTS.

Mrs. Cora L. V. Hatch, the "spiritual medium," [illegible] a few weeks ago in this City was hailed by the [illegible] of the new belief with rapturous [illegible] appeared again before a public audience last night at the Tabernacle. She is represented to have been seriously ill in the interval since her last public appearance, and the calamity is said to have been occasioned by the shock which her nervous system received during the controversy, which arose out of her previous lecture (about a fortnight ago) at the Stuyvesant Institute, from which the audience seemed to regard her or the spirits as having come off certainly second best.

The attendance, last night, was very considerable. The lady was accompanied on the platform by her husband and Rev. S. B. Brittan, editor of the Spiritual Telegraph. The latter gentleman presided. In accordance with previous custom, it was announced that a Committee would be appointed from among the audience, to prepare a series of questions, to be submitted to the medium for answer and discussion This turned out to be a matter of considerable difficulty. The first gentleman proposed (and the nomination was made in a voice having a remarkable resemblance to that of the new United States Marshal) was Major Hall, late of Nicaragua. The gallant Major peremptorily declined.

The voice, in a tone of gentle rebuke, shouted, "D—n it, go it, man," but the Major remained firm to his resolution and his seat. A facetious individual then rose in one of the back pews and nominated Capt. Rynders. The voice immediately exclaimed that Capt. Rynders could not serve, because he was not in the room. Many of the spiritists thereupon became satisfied that this was a spiritual communication, and relying on that conclusion, did not feel called upon to question the truth of the announcement. There being several skeptics present, however, it was resolved to test the veracity of the statement, and one of them, bolder than the rest, got up and discovered in close proximity to the reporters' table an objective, substantial, corporeal entity, corresponding in wig, complexion, cast of features, size, build and general appearance to the concrete idea of Rynders himself.

This object was pronounced to be the veritable, redoubtable, unquestionable Rynders in propria persona, and the audience asserted as much when they voted it by a large majority to serve on the Committee.

After the lapse of a few minutes Professor Mapes (who had at first declined) and Mr. Charles A. Wentcott were appointed to aid Captain Rynders in his deliberations, and they retired for that purpose.

In the meantime Mr. Brittan, the Chairman, occupied the attention of the audience by stating his views on Spiritism generally, and that development of it which Mrs. Hatch exemplified in particular.

The Committee, on their return, reported the following questions:

1. What principles of natural law govern the action of the gyroscope?
2. What causes the seeds of plants to germinate?
3. Did the various races now inhabiting the earth all spring from a common mundane parent?
4. Was Jesus of Nazareth of Divine or human origin?

The Chairman, in submitting these queries, begged to suggest that it might be difficult for the medium in the space of an hour to give a satisfactory explanation of four questions of so much importance, when some very wise men had written volumes on some of these questions at least, without furnishing what the world had been pleased to regard as a satisfactory solution.

It was then moved that the lady should answer the last two queries, and the motion being backed by Captain Rynders, it was carried.

The questions were read again in reversed order. The medium fixed her eyes for a minute or so on the ceiling, rose slowly, and with upturned face offered prayer.

She then proceeded in general terms to state her distinctions between divinity and humanity, as preparatory to her reply to the last question. Spirit she defined to be that which really is—that which is unchangeable because it is immutable and eternal—that which exists as a being, as a principle, as a power, as a love, as a divinity, as a great overruling controller or ruler; and this man had called deity. Varied in religion, and science, according to the education and circumstantial development of the human mind, yet always called Deity, always called Jehovah, God, the Divine ruler and controller and creator of the universe. In answer to the first question, she would oppose no particular theory, no theological dogma or creeds, but would reason strictly from our knowledge of the nature of God and his glories.

Therefore, Jesus of Nazareth was both divine and human. He could not be human without being divine. Why? The human soul, as the divinest and purest of God's creations, embodied in an external form, which was but the expression or outwrought form of that soul, was supposed to be the highest created things, and that which was nearest unto Deity—that which was a representation of himself—that which embodied a part of His life and power—that which was the result of his love and wisdom. And nature was but the means of its manifestation. Therefore, whatever was human was divine, for Deity was the source of all things natural or spiritual. Another view was this: Nature might be termed the mother of the human race. Deity, Jehovah, God, the Father. The creative principle was God. The created principle, as acted on by Him, infused with life and power, was Nature. These presented the two great attributes of Deity, life and manifestation—thought, motion, activity, eternity, embodied in God—embodied in Nature. Therefore, the result of God and of Nature, in its highest and purest form, was man. Jesus of Nazareth was a man. Why? Because he had a human form. How much more than a man he was, it was not given to her to define—but he was divine, inasmuch as he had life, power, beauty, glory as other men had, and more divine than other men in proportion as that divinity, that life, that power, that soul, was manifested in his external life and in his daily teachings. As a direct and positive providence of the Deity in presenting to the world that form, that spirit, that light, that star of Bethlehem, we were to speak of him. It was this: the creations of the physical world and the creations of the spiritual world ultimated themselves into eras—into certain degrees of development, when a more startling manifestation, revelation or convolution was presented either in the mental or in the spiritual world. It was stated in Biblical history that Adam and Eve were the two great principles of male and female development in the human race—which race, simple, innocent, worshiping God according to their natural ideas, not educational ones—worshiping Him in the simplicity of their natural element, or in the Garden of Eden, which would be the result of such simplicity and of such innocence. This Adam and this Eve, we might say, represents the male and female elements of nations and of the world—represents not only the Adam and Eve of the Holy Land, of the Garden of Eden, but represents the Adam and Eve of every nation, of every tribe, of every man and woman on this globe.

As to the question whether the human race was sprung from a common mundane parent, she would answer that the great principles of male or female elements—or the great principles of procreation as perceived and analyzed—are framed into the natural world, and through the natural into the spiritual, and through the spiritual and the natural back to Deity—these principles were manifested first in this Adam and Eve of the human mind. But this Adam and this Eve represents not only one Adam and one Eve in the Holy Land, or in the Garden of Eden, but represents the male and female parents of every nation, every tribe, and in every country of the world. Why was this? Because if all nations had sprung from one common parent, and, as it was said, that six thousand years or more had been employed since the time of that creation of Adam and Eve, they would readily perceive that the advancement, as discovered by science, as discovered by social development, as discovered by historical revolutions, must have been immense since that time, if the Adam and Eve of Scriptural History were the first and only parents of the human family.

What followed? That of every country, of every nation, the myriads upon myriads of nations which had passed away, and whose bones have become a part of the soil on which we now trod, whose forms had decomposed, perhaps composed a part of the tree, flower, or shrub which surrounded us—that those nations had first parents adapted to the particular country, the climate, the development of mind or of spirit within them. Consequently, we must look to the first Adam and the first Eve who must go and embody them in their particular journey to the human mind and to the attributes of the human mind. Then that Christ sent to the nations of the world was sent to the direct descendants of the Adam and Eve that dwelt in the Garden of Eden, and to them he was a Saviour; to their descendants, to the Jewish tribes after the darkness of the Mosaic dispensation, after the darkness of the Heathen night which had settled upon them, this Saviour and this Christ came to relieve them. Perhaps this Adam and this Eve spoken of might have been the most highly developed of any tribe and of any nation. And tracing them back it may be so. As we traced directly the origin of the present race to them, as having descended through the ages, through all the long line of ancestors down to the nineteenth century, when from every nation on earth, from every quarter of the globe, from every land, from every country was represented a pure type of humanity, and human form and human mind. Never having heard of this Christ or this Saviour of the Jews, what followed? That Deity or God in his divine creations outworked to nations and to worlds forms, attributes, governments and powers adapted to their position and to their development; that nought had been made in vain; that the developments of the Hindoos, the Heathen idolator, were just as essential in God's sight as were the developments of Christianity. That they presented to Him one phase of his great and eternal laws; and from the Adam and Eve of the Heathen nations had descended a religion, a religion as sincere, perhaps, not as holy, perhaps not as lofty, perhaps not as intelligent as the Christian, but one which was calculated to give them the idea of worship, and until progress, advancement, civilization came, it answered their purpose. It caused them to acknowledge the superior power of some controlling mind, some eternal law. Then Jesus of Nazareth was a divine and a human being; was a godly being, inasmuch as his thoughts, principles, actions, life, were godly; was a human being inasmuch as his form, his brain, his general conformation were human; was both divine and human, inasmuch as he was the era of a spiritualist development. He was the revolution, he was the light, he was the morning after the darkness, after ignorance and crime. He was the renewal of the Adam principle—the divine power of love and of beauty. He was the presentation of that wisdom and love combined. First love and then wisdom.

The lady continued, at some length, to deal with the subject in the manner indicated by the line of argument thus far reproduced.

The same modes of expression, peculiarities of style, onomalous grammatical construction, and singular logical display (for in what we have given of what she said, her words are exactly followed) were indulged in until the end. In dealing with the question as to the cause of the germination of seeds, she assigned the phenomenon to a sort of passional attraction between the chemical elements of the seed of the future plant and the same elements as existing in the soil. The mutual action of these duplicated elements in the seed caused it, she said, to grow.

In conclusion, (having spoken for an hour,) she remarked, using the pronoun royal as is her custom: Owing to the lack of strength in our medium's physical form, we shall be obliged to discontinue the lecture on the present occasion. When we meet you again, we hope our nervous and physical system will have gained more strength and vigor. Our ideas have been brief, yet we trust we presented the principles which were embodied in the questions; and if we have given any thoughts or any ideas which are not strictly in accordance with the rules of logic or the rules of science, pardon us, not because perhaps we did not know, but because we had not the proper organs at present to speak them through. After a brief invocation she resumed her seat.

Captain Rynders being called upon for his opinion of her powers, expressed the utmost satisfaction with everything he had heard. He declared he had come in expecting to see a test medium and to be humbugged, but had never been more deceived—("Or elevated, enlightened and purified," shouted a bursting advocate of the doctrine.) Her prayer, he solemnly asseverated, was heautiful, her theory profound, and her language eloquent.

He had no hesitation in saying that he had never heard so beautiful and touching an exhortation in any pulpit, (he laid immense stress on the first syllable,) and he had the highest possible opinion of the lady's talent, though she had said several things that he could not agree to.

After an introduction to the fair Pythoness, the Captain withdrew, and the audience did likewise.

Trinity Church before the Committee.

From the Albany Statesman.

The Assembly Committee on Charitable and Religious Societies was engaged yesterday afternoon and this morning in hearing parties interested in the Trinity Church bill, which passed the Senate on last Monday night. As a matter of course, the brief time allowed for discussion at this late period of the session, prevented anything like a full presentation of the merits of the case; and the action of the Committee, whatever it may be, can only be based upon a very superficial examination of the question. It will, therefore, become doubly the duty of the House to see that no outside influence indnces hasty action on the bill, should the Committee think proper to report it.

Among those who have spoken before the Committee is Hon. Samuel B. Ruggles, who appeared on behalf of Clement C. Moore, Benjamin B. Wintehop, G. G. Van Wagenen, and several thousand other Episcopalians of the City. The argument of Mr. Ruggles, though necessarily brief, was an exceedingly able one, and set forth in a very striking light the impolicy and gross injustice of any invasion of the vested rights of a venerable and venerated religious corporation.

Mr. Ruggles took the broad ground that legislative interference with the Charter of Trinity Church was at once unconstitutional and unjust; that every church should be controlled by its own congregation; and that to throw open its management to the members of other parishes and other churches, was at variance with church government and with republican principles. He held that, independent of legal objections, the Legislature of the State of New-York, for good and sufficient public reasons, should not do the act required at their hands. The Church, in the first place, is better off, the congregation better off, while the property of Trinity Church is under its present management, in the hands of those who now control its funds. It needs something of elasticity in such a corporation, so that, without being bound down by stringent resolutions and restrictions, they should be able, if necessary, to throw out five thousand dollars here, and ten thousand dollars there, as the necessities of churches or the interests of religion may demand. Such a corporation, to be useful, should be of a parental character, and enjoy the privilege to use its means at its own will, for the good of all the children beneath its care.

Mr. Ruggles declared that the real difficulty had scarcely been brought to the attention of the Legislature. The fact is, that the quarrel is a theological quarrel. Trinity Church, in her ministration among the poor, and in bringing her clergy and her people in immediate communion, thus imitating some of the best features of the Catholic Church, has gained the name of "High Church;" and the desire and determination of the "Low Church" is to crush her out and destroy her. He referred the Committee to the history of the Dartmouth College case, when New-Hampshire lost her senses and stretched out her arm to take away the vested rights of that institution, acquired by the gift of the Earl of Dartmouth. New-Hampshire then found out that she was not a sovereign State. That over her and above her was the Constitution, the great shield of our Government, a machine invented in America, by which we govern our Governors,—the broad and majestic mantle covering every inch of private property from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and protecting it from violation.

Upon the famous Dartmouth College case, Chief Justice Marshall pronounced the opinion of the court; and he (Mr. Ruggles,) believed that we had better plot ten sovereign States from the Union, than lose that decision. He trusted that the Legislature of the State of New-York would not follow the Jacobinism of New-Hampshire, and render it necessary for Trinity Church to invoke the mighty power which had in former days spread the shield of the Constitution over Dartmouth College, to protect her from the usurper and the spoiler.

The Repeal of the Kansas Test Oaths and the Slave Code.

There were certain acts of the first Legislature of the Territory of Kansas which seemed to be universally condemned, and which received the special reprobation of such prominent Senators as Messrs. Cass, Wellie, and others, and which the bill of Mr. Toombs proposed to annul by authority of Congress. The subjoined enactments, which we find certified by the Chief Clerk of the Council, will show how far the work of repeal has gone:

Be it enacted by the Governor and the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Kansas:

Sec. 1. That so much of the eleventh section of an act entitled "An act to regulate elections" as provides that any person challenged as a voter may be required to take an oath or affirmation that he will sustain the provisions of the several acts of Congress in that section specified, be and the same is hereby repealed.

Sec. 2. All officers hereafter elected or appointed to any office of honor, trust, or profit, under the laws of this Territory shall, before entering upon the duties of such office, take and subscribe an oath to support the Constitution of the United States, and the provisions of an act to organize the Territories of Nebraska and Kansas, and faithfully to discharge himself in office, and no other.

Sec 3. All attorneys at law obtaining a license in this Territory shall take and subscribe an oath to support the Constitution of the United States and the provisions of an act to organize the Territories of Nebraska and Kansas, and faithfully and honestly to demean himself in his practice.

Sec. 4. All acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

This act to take effect and be in force from and after its passage.

THOMAS JOHNSON, President of the Council.
WM. G. MATHIAS, Speaker of the House.

Be it enacted by the Governor and Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Kansas. That the twelfth section of an act entitled "An act to punish offences against slave property," be and the same is hereby repealed.

THOMAS JOHNSON, President of the Council.
WM. G. MATHIAS, Speaker of the House.

The bill amending the Revised Statutes in relation to the duties of the Executive Department, came up for a third reading.

Mr. H. Baker rose to a question of privilege. As one of the Committee of nine who had ground out this bill, he desired to say that he had not recommended its passage. It was a fraud on its title, as it appropriated $2,000 for furnishing the Executive Department and fixed the salaries of the Governor and his Private Secretary. He charged unfair action on the Committee and declared the Governor's Private Secretary had influenced the Committee in reporting the bill.

Mr. B. Owen fully and satisfactorily vindicated the course of the Committee, and the position of the Governor's Secretary. That gentleman had been requested by him, (Owen,) as Chairman of the Committee of nine, to furnish the number and title of the bill, and he did so. The bill was considered favorably, after the Committee had heard Ex-Gov. Seymour, in its favor.

A long and somewhat personal debate ensued, during which Mr. Beckwith, of Washington, alluded to an article in the Knickerbocker denouncing Gov. King, and declared that its writer must have been a dirty political scavenger.

After these remarks, Mr. Hastings, editor of the Knickerbocker, went to Mr. Beckwith's chair, and told him that when he had closed his political term, he (Hastings) would settle with him for the words he had spoken.

Mr. Beckwith, in the presence of the House, then struck Mr. Hastings a violent blow, which glanced off and hit Mr. Cameron, a member of the House.

The House was instantly the scene of intense excitement, which was increased considerably by a man in the gallery falling in a fit.

Mr. Beckwith, when order had been restored, appeared at the Bar and apologized to the House.

A Committee of Investigation was appointed; after which the bill was recommitted.

News from Mexico.

PROMULGATION OF THE NEW CONSTITUTION—MISCELLANEOUS INTELLIGENCE.

New-Orleans papers of Saturday last have been received. They contain details of Mexican News to the 20th ult.

The rejection of the Forsyth Treaties was not known at the Capital up to the 14th ult. A rumor that they had been accepted occasioned great rejoicing.

The new Constitution was promulgated on the 11th of March, the anniversary of the adoption of the plan.

The Siglo publishes a list of 71 deputies who failed to sign the new Constitution. They represent principally the States of Jalisco, San Louis, Sonora and Sinaloa. The Territories of Colima and Sierra Gorda were not at all represented.

The law ordering elections throughout the Republic was signed by the President on the 12th.

El Monitor says that Santa Ana is in constant communication with the Mexican emissaries.

Great excitement existed in Sinaloa and Sonora at the rumored project of an invasion of those regions by California fillibusters, and serious measures of defence were preparing by Gov. Yanez and the local authorities.

The trial of Gen. Gandara for insurrection was about to begin before a court martial.

The pacification of the Republic appears to be for the nonce nearly complete. All the principal fomenters of insurrection, Gandara, Osollos, Blancarte, &c., have been put down, or arrested. The Trait d'Union thinks, nevertheless, that the policy is more apparent than real, that the clergy and conservatives are still endeavoring to consummate a reaction, and that greater need than ever exists for firmness and vigor.

The State of Jalisco was menaced at the last accounts with an invasion of two thousand Indians and five hundred mounted robbers. Troops have been dispatched in large numbers to protect Jalisco and attack the rebels.

Mr. Jaquez, a high dignity of Iguala, was recently attacked in his house by a large number of bandits. Aided by a servant, he defended himself bravely, but was at length induced to surrender on a promise of personal safety. No sooner had he placed himself in the power of the wretches, than he was most vilely assassinated.

As usual, we read of the attacks and robberies of the mail. The Indians on the frontiere continue their depredations. The Mexican Extraordinary says:

"In Durango the Indians appear to be continuing their ravages without abatement. The different statements of their ravages in the past year are most startling. Murders, robberies and outrages of the grossest nature till a calendar of the most pitiful character."

The straightened circumstances of the supreme Government, says the same journal, have forced the suspension of payment at the custom-houses of Vera Cruz and that city.

The Vera Cruz diligence was robbed at Acajete. A Holy Father was one of the passengers, whom the robbers did not spare. Soon after relieving him of $400 in cash, the robbers required him to give them absolution.

THE NEW MEXICAN CONSTITUTION.

From the New Orleans Picayune, April 4.

The new Mexican Constitution, ratified on the 17th of February, was promulgated in the most solemn manner on the 11th ult., at the capital of the Republic, amid general rejoicing. The day selected was the anniversary of the adoption, at Acapulco, of the reformed "Plan of Ayutla," upon which the labors of the constituent assembly were based. The usual business of the city was for the time being suspended, the national flag floated from all the public buildings, and the roar of artillery proclaimed that a new order of things had begun. Only one unpleasant circumstance mingled with the people's joy. The clergy entire, with the hierarchy at their head, declined to join in the celebration, refused even to permit the national flag to float from the cathedral, or the church bells to sound. The civil authorities, however, hesitated not to take possession, and finally the joy became, in appearance at least, and for the moment, universal.

The new Constitution is, indeed, an imposing document, filling nearly three pages, or thirteen columns, of the Siglo. It runs, "In the name of God and the authority of the Mexican people," and bears the solemn title of "The Political Constitution of the Mexican Republic, formed upon the indestructible basis of her legitimate independence, proclaimed the 16th of September, 1810, and consummated the 27th September, 1821." It is composed of eight distinct titules, comprising one hundred and twenty-eight articles, subdivided again in the most perspicuous manner, into sections, paragraphs, &c.

Title 1 defines abstractly the rights of man, viz.: life, liberty, the pursuit of happiness, &c.; the rights and obligations of Mexican citizens, native and adopted, viz.: equal protection of the laws, and the defence of the honor, interests and integrity of the Republic; the obligations and privileges of foreigners, viz.: obedience to the laws and respect for the institutions of the country, they in turn being guaranteed the fullest protection and enjoyment of the same.

Title 2 treats of the national sovereignty, which is declared to reside in the people; the form of the Government, which shall be Federal; and its several constituent parts, the sovereign, independent States enumerated. The State of the "Valley of Mexico," which comprises the so-called Federal District, shall only be known as a distinct sovereignty upon the transfer of the Supreme Government to some other place.

Title 3 treats of the division of powers: First, the Legislative, consisting of one general assembly, denominated the "Congress of the Union," elective every two years by the free suffrages of the Mexican people, and charged with the enacting of all Federal laws, in the initiation of which they have, however, only concurrent powers with the President and the Legislatures of the several States. The Congress will have two sessions annually—the first beginning the 16th of September, and terminating the 15th of December; the second, beginning the 1st of April, and terminating the last of May. They are guaranteed all the usual rights, privileges and prerogatives of legislativo assemblies. Second, the Executive, vested in one single individual, styled the "President of the United States of Mexico." He must be a Mexican citizen by birth, thirty-five years of age, and resident of the country at the time of his election. His term of office is limited to four years, to begin with the 1st of December. He has the power to declare war and make treaties—subject, however, to the ratification of Congress—and is charged with the other usual duties of an Executive. No ecclesiastic can ever become President of the Republic. Third, the Judicial, vested in various District and Circuit Courts, with jurisdiction not dissimilar from our own, and one Supreme Court, which is also constituted a court of final appeal.

Title 4 treats, in a general manner, of the responsibilities of public functionaries, the members of the Legislative Assembly, law Judges, Heads of Departments, State Governors and President of the Republic, each and all of whom are separately and solemnly charged with obedience to the constitution, and the faithful execution of laws enacted under it, in their various departments.

Title 5 defines the rights and duties of the several States of the confederacy, to each of which is guaranteed a Government republican in form and spirit. Their powers are limited. They can in no case form treaties of alliance with each other, or with Foreign Powers; coin or issue money; impose tonnage or port duties, or levy taxes of any kind upon imports or exports, without the consent of Congress. No more can they organize and maintain armies of mevies, or declare war, except in case of sudden invasion which admits of no delay. Each State, moreover, shall give full credit to the laws and records of the other, and of the Supreme Government.

Title 6 declares, among other things, that this constitution, and the laws of Congress enacted under it shall be the supreme law of the land; title 7 provides for additions and amendments; title 8 declares its inviolability, it remaining in full force and authority even in case of rebellion.

The new constitution does not take full effect till the 16th of September next, though in the meantime the federal elections will be held under it. The most prominent candidates for the Presidency are Comonfort, Alvarez, Lerdo, Azalledo and Vidaurri.

THE FILLIBUSTERING MOVEMENTS IN CALIFORNIA, AGAINST SONORA.

From the Mexican Extraordinary, Feb. 23.

At length the Press of Mexico are generally coming to understand what we have so long been speaking about—that the pressure from the North will very soon give trouble to Mexican constituted authorities in the State of Sonora. They begin to see through the symptoms in the North; but still they are unable to lay hold of these important movements, except as they appear to the most sommon minds. They are talking in the dark, and hence their language carries with it no instruction to the public or to the Government.

The movement now being made towards Senora is nothing more than a revival of a political organization that existed two years ago in California, which was gotten up by men of talent and influence at that time. The name of this organization was the "Pacific Star Association," and its object was secession from the American Union, and the establishment of an independent Republic, that should comprehend the territory lying on the western slope of the Rocky Mountains, from British Oregon down to Central America, and including Central America. A platform was drawn up by the leaders of this Association, and the first talent of the State was at once enlisted to start the ball in motion. A large number of members were quickly enrolled; as to the ambitious, nothing could be more handsomely conceived than the basis which was drawn up for the Association. Fat offices and elevated positions loomed up before every member, and the best of good feeling characterized every meeting of the leaders.

Unfortunately for their plans, just at this stage of the game, the Know-Nothing Party, that had already carried the elections in San Francisco, promised to turn everything topsy-turvy in the State, and in it were to be found many promises for previously disappointed office-seekers. The "Pacific Star Association" had within it several of this sort, and they were decoyed from their secession designs and induced to join this new party. This was the first blow the Association received, and before it could recuperate from it Walker's success in Nicaragua drew off many active members, among them the author of the plan.

With Walker and other causes the original Association has been entirely disbanded, and we can only now and then notice its members working away to the same end in a different field of action. The man who first conceived the plan of the Association we spoke of, for the erection of an independent Pacific Republic, is now coming down upon Mexico.

This is not a new enterprise to him, but one that has maddened his brain and kept his wits at work through many a year. He is no common adventurer, but a man who has led an active life, and always filled first positions in the society in which he has moved. He is married into a highly respectable Mexican family, and has the advantage of a large acquaintance with the Mexican people; and although we have always regarded the fillibustering movements against Sonora as disastrous, we must confess that when we learned by the last mail that Henry A. Crabb was at the head of the movement we came to the conclusion at once that it was time for Mexico to do something.

Mr. Crabb undoubtedly entertains the same notions that he did two years ago, and if he be not acting directly on the same platform, he has pretty much the same end in view. He is truly a daring and sagacious leader, and, although he may approach the frontiers of Mexico as a quiet American settler, still his movements should be regarded at all times with suspicion by Mexico, unless Mexico can see in such a man the ability to work good for her territory in the future Republic of the Pacific.

From the St. Paul Democrat, March 26.

In confirmation of the intelligence published yesterday, in reference to the massacre of white settlers at Spirit Lake, we have received the following letter from a reliable gentleman at Mankato:

MANKATO, Sunday, March 22, 1857.

According to the report of Mr. Markham, of Spirit Lake, in this Territory, a shocking affair took place there on the 9th of this month. Spirit Lake is about fifteen miles from Springfield, on the Des Moines River, in a southwesterly course, and near the Iowa line. Mr. Markham had been to the Des Moines River to see after his oxen, which were then feeding upon rushes, and in going home got bewildered and hungry, and started for the nearest house. Upon reaching it he found the door and windows broken open, and on the inside upon the floor lay the body of an old lady.

A short distance from the house, upon the snow he found a boy about twelve years of age, who was also dead. A short distance from the house of the boy he found that of a girl, partially devoured by the dogs. He says that he visited four other houses where families had been living, but no person was there; everything in the house was thrown over the floors. He started for the next house, expecting to stay all night, but found several Indian tents pitched before the door, and the house filled with Indians. He, being fatigued, crept into a snow bank and laid until morning, when he started for the settlement at Springfield.

They, finding that he was in earnest about his story, and swearing to its correctness, immediately dispatched two men for Fort Ridgely, who succeeded in raising fifty soldiers to come to their assistance. The men are in this place this evening, and will start for the Des Moines River in the morning. The soldiers will camp for the night at South Bend. We have heard Indian stories before, but we are inclined, from the source, to believe this to be true.

THE NEW AMERICAN TARIFF IN ENGLAND.

The United States and the Sound Dues.

Our files of London papers, brought by the City of Manchester, which arrived yesterday, and by the Washington, which arrived on Thursday [illegible] to the 25th of March inclusive.

The Berlin correspondent of the London [illegible] writing on March 19, says:

"The United States of North America [illegible] represented at the late Sound Dues [illegible] Copenhagen, the American Government [illegible] fused, some time back, to acknowledge [illegible] on which the Sound Dues are collected, [illegible] expectations are, however, entertained that [illegible] an arrangement has been arrived at with [illegible] pean Powers, that Government will be found [illegible] willing to enter into this generally received [illegible] the redemption of them. Dispatches were [illegible] from Copenhagen to Washington on this [illegible] ficiently early in February for them to [illegible] before the closing of Congress on the 4th [illegible] that it is not improbable that some [illegible] tory to Denmark may arrive in the Danish [illegible] fore the conclusion of the term appointed [illegible] American Government for the determination [illegible] treaty with Denmark."

Accounts from Naples state that the King has authorized the modification of the prisons in his dominions, and ordered considerable improvements in the penitentiary system. For some time past it has been rumored that the King is disposed to make concessions in favor of his unhappy subjects. Several attempts at a reconciliation were made, but without success. Now, however, it is said that a M. [illegible] is deputed to Paris charged with a mission, and which, of course, is not official, but still a mission, and which it is thought may lead to a reconciliation.

We read in the Paris correspondence of the London Globe:

"Lord Elgin is expected daily in Paris, when he will concert with the French Cabinet on the combined measures to be undertaken in China by the two countries. It is by no means impossible that a third person, with a land force, will be despatched to the Chinese seas by the French Government; and this in spite of the statements made to the contrary by the semi-official papers."

The Paris correspondent of the London [illegible] writing on the 21st of March, says:

"I hear that a judicial 'instruction' is actively going on with respect to a political plot, of which scarcely anything has been said here, which is said to have been discovered in February last, and which was to have broken out in action on the Place de la Bastile, on the 24th of February last."

The Amended Tariff of the United States.

From the London Times.

The last official act of President Pierce will, perhaps, in the opinion of posterity, cast a redeeming ray over the career of a confessedly unsuccessful administrate. Before quitting office, he gave his assent to the new Tariff Bill of the United States. Thus, within ten or twelve years after ourselves, the Americans have taken one step in the direction of Free Trade. Not that the new Tariff goes very far, for still nearly the whole of the revenue will be raised by duties on imports; but the principle is admitted that these duties are imposed for the sake of revenue, and not of protection; and we may expect that, as the population and wealth of the Republic increase, the Treasury becomes more unnecessarily rich, the charges will be further reduced. The [illegible] by indirect taxation. [illegible] is also a question that [illegible] permanently settled population require the application of true principles of political economy. We may, then, hope to see the gradual development of that free system towards which the new Tariff represents the state of transition.

Cruelty in Merchant Vessels.

From the London Times.

A hideous case has just been tried at Exeter; the report of it might have been seen in our impression of Monday. It involved no point of law; we [illegible] it can be drawn in any way into a precedent. If we notice it at all it is simply because it discloses one of those fearful tales of cruelty which the imagination of our most practised retailers of horrors could scarcely have conceived. The master of a merchant ship, in conjunction with the mate, murdered in cold blood, and with every circumstance of torture, a wretched negro who acted as cook on board the vessel. The ship was of 120 tons burden. In February of last year she sailed from London to Newcastle, and, having taken a cargo of coals on board, made sail for Senegal, thence to Cape Verde Islands, or to Rio Grande, and then back to England. HUGH ORR was the name of the master, one ATWELL their mate, and the wretched creature who was so foully murdered was named EDWARD DEVUR. He was a negro, a native of Bostpu, in the United States. It appeared by the testimony of the witnesses that the ill-treatment which led to his death commenced at the Cape Verde Islands. The master went on shore [illegible] one day, and returned the next. As soon as he came back he called the cook into the cabin, knocked him down, and kicked him about the body. A few days afterwards the mate beat him with a broomstick about the legs. Then the master thrashed him with a rope, then he knocked him down, then he beat him with a handbrush. This was chance work, however, merely preliminary to the systematic course of frightful brutality which only ended in the unfortunate negro's death. The master, HUGH ORR, made a "cat," and when this was made he was in the habit of calling down the black into the little cabin of the Hannah Jane. He would then knock him down, and beat her the wretched creature with the instrument of torture. In order to indulge in this exercise more at his ease, it appeared that he tried to tie his victim up by passing two half hitches or loops over his thumbs, and when the master was unable to accomplish this by his own unassisted efforts he called in the assistance of the mate. Between them they would tie the cook up to the tacker, and then flog him to their heart's content. The witnesses who testified to these facts were, mainly, the cabin-boy, and a seaman, one THOMAS APPLEBY, who was one of the crew of the Hannah Jane. The last witness said that frequently at night, when he was at the wheel, he heard cries of agony issuing from the cabin where the torture was in progress. The night before that on which the negro died this man saw the master and the mate flogging him. They had hauled him down to a chest by his thumbs, so that his back was rounded, and then they gave him 300 lashes and upwards. A few days before this he had been lashed up to the fore rigging—his heels higher than his head—and in this position had been flogged by the mate. The two ruffians had ordered the poor creature's back to be scrubbed, while it was one mass of sores and bruises. It is right to mention, as considerable weight was laid on it in the course of the proceedings, that the night before the negro died, the mate, ATWELL, saw him lying on the deck and kicked him on the breast with his heavy sea-boots, and also struck him with a block. It became, then, a question whether these kicks and blows were not the immediate cause of death. If so, as the master of a vessel is not criminally responsible for the acts of his mate, HUGH ORR might have escaped scot free. The jury, happily, held otherwise, and found the prisoner guilty of manslaughter, upon which the presiding Judge instantly passed upon him a sentence of transportation for life. Had he been found guilty of the capital offence, and suffered punishment accordingly, there would have been few who would have lamented his fate.

The case, of course, turned upon the degree of credit which could be attached to the testimony of the witnesses. We are ready to admit that a conspiracy of three or four persons to procure the condemnation of the master on board a small craft like the Hannah Jane, is within the limit of probability. On board a larger vessel, with a more numerous crew, such an attempt must necessarily fail, for it would be impossible to procure the needful unanimity in perjury. Now, the company of the Hannah Jane consisted of the master, HUGH ORR; the mate, ATWELL; three seamen, HARVEY, FRAZER and PHILLIPS; but PHILLIPS deserted, and was replaced by JARVIS; CONN, the cabin-boy: and EDWARD DEVUR, the black cook. ATWELL, the mate, disappeared from the ship at Rio Grande, after the death of the cook. It must, of course, occur to every one's mind, on the first blush of the matter, as strange, that as soon as the Hannah Jane reached Rio Grande, where there was a British Consul, the seamen did not make such a complaint to that functionary as would have led to an investigation, and to the arrest of the master and mate. APPLEBY and HARVEY stated that they did make such a complaint, but that the Consul treated their application with something very like contempt, merely saying that he would write to England upon the subject. We think it highly improbable that the seamen did lay any formal complaint before the Consul. They no doubt went into his office and grumbled out something, which the Consul probably set down as mere evidence of a squabble between the master and the ship's company. As far as the Consul is concerned, the inquiry cannot stop here. The result of the trial at Exeter the other day proves that there was a terrible necessity for investigation at Rio, when the circumstances of the case were fresh in the minds of all; and the mate, whose conduct was inculpated equally with that of the master, was in the Consul's power. The investigation into the conduct of the Consul will, no doubt, be set on foot in the proper quarter. Passing from this point, we find that the evidence upon which the prisoner ORR was convicted of manslaughter was given by the two seamen, APPLEBY and HARVEY, and by CONN, the cabin-boy. There had, moreover, been a dispute about wages between the master and these two seamen, APPLEBY and HARVEY, when the ship arrived at Plymouth. It is, indeed, very probable that if ORR had not fallen out with the men upon this point he might have escaped prosecution altogether. Still, this was a point which, although it might affect the degree of credit which the Jury might be disposed to attach to the statements of the two seamen, could do no more. CONN, the cabin-boy, was not cross-examined for the defence, and JARVIS was not produced. The effort was, of course, to show that the negro's death resulted from the acts of ATWELL, for which acts, unless under his own special order, the master, ORR, could not be held responsible. The jury and judge, however, upon hearing the whole case, came to the very sound decision that, whatever might have been the guilt of ATWELL, ORR was equally answerable for the death of the unfortunate black. The story is a most horrible and disgusting one, but we know not how the occasional occurrences of such crimes is to be avoided, any more than the occasional occurrence of murder upon shore. The rapid spread of steam navigation, and the consequent rapidity with which detection and conviction must follow upon all such offences, may do much—the growing tendency to use only large craft for long runs still more. We had hoped that under the provisions of the act for the better regulation of the merchant service, we should cease altogether to hear of such acts of brutality on the part of the captains of the smaller merchant vessels, and things, no doubt, are improved. After all, it is the owner who should be really answerable, both to the seamen in his employment and to the public, for the choice of the master, in whose hands he places so much irresponsible power while the ship is at sea.

The General Election in Great Britain.

LORD PALMERSTON'S ADDRESS TO HIS CONSTITUENTS.

To the Electors of Tiverton.

GENTLEMEN: Parliament having dissolved in order that the electors of the united kingdom may have an opportunity of expressing their opinion on the existing state of public affairs, I present myself to you as a candidate for the continuance of that confidence with which, as your representative, I have so long been honored.

The question which is submitted to the judgment of the country is which shall be the men to whose hands shall be committed the destinies of the nation, and whether that charge shall continue to be confided to the present Administration, or whether it shall be transferred to that aggregate of hitherto discordant elements by whose combined action on a late occasion a vote of censure was passed upon Her Majesty's Government.

The claims of the present Administration to the confidence of the country rest upon facts and events which will form an important chapter in the history of these times.

We undertook the conduct of affairs, in obedience to the call of our Sovereign, at a moment of no small difficulty, in the midst of a great war, and when those men who had heretofore been looked up to as the leaders of parties had for various reasons declined the responsibility of office, or had been unable to form such an Administration as was in their opinion equal to the crisis. We carried on with energy and vigor the war in which the country was engaged, and in hearty cooperation with our gallant allies—the French, the Sardinians, and the Turks—we brought it to a successful termination, and the result was a treaty of peace which accomplished the objects of the war, and which secured for the allies conditions which some of those to whom I have alluded had deemed it unreasonable to propose and impossible to obtain.

In the execution of the stipulations of this treaty difficulties in regard to matters of great importance arose, those difficulties by firmness in negotiation Her Majesty's Government mainly contributed in a satisfactory manner to remove, and the full attainment of the objects of the treaty in regard to the matters in which those difficulties related has thus been secured.

At the beginning of the recent session of Parliament we announced our intention of taking off the war portion of the income-tax, and we proposed a budget which was approved by a majority of 80 votes.

The Persian war, which had originated in aggressions and breach of engagement by the Persian Government, was put an end to by a treaty of peace concluded at Paris. Our diplomatic relations with the United States had been replaced upon their usual footing by the appointment of Lord NAPIER and his departure for Washington.

Papers had been presented to Parliament explaining the reasons why the British and French missions had been withdrawn from Naples, and no notice had been given of any motion to be founded on those papers.

Upon none of these matters did the opposition deem it possible to found any successful attack on the Government.

But events of much importance had happened in China, unforeseen by Her Majesty's Government, and not the consequence of any steps taken by them.

An insolent barbarian wielding authority at Canton had violated the British flag, broken the engagements of treaties, offered rewards for the heads of British subjects in that part of China, and planned their destruction by murder, assassination, and poisons.

The British officers, civil and naval, on the station had taken those measures which appeared to them to be proper and necessary to obtain satisfaction and redress, and her Majesty's Government had approved the course pursued by those officers in vindication of the national honor and for the assertion of our national rights. A combination of political parties, not till this last session united, carried a resolution declaring the course pursued by our officers in China unjustifiable, and consequently censuring Her Majesty's Government for having approved that course.

But if that course was unjustifiable, the British Government, instead of demanding an apology, ought to make one, and instead of expecting satisfaction ought to offer compensation to the Chinese Commissioner, and this course the combined opponents of the Government, if their Parliamentary victory had installed them in office, must in consistency have been prepared to pursue.

Will the British nation give their support to men who have thus endeavored to make the humiliation and degradation of their country the stepping-stone to power?

I confidentially assert that such will not be the answer that will be given to the appeal now made to the electors of the United Kingdom.

We offer to the country a Government founded upon far different principles. Abroad, it will be our earnest endeavor to procure peace, but peace with honor and with safety, peace with the maintenance of national rights, peace with security to our fellow-countrymen in foreign lands. At home, our guiding principles will be judicious and well-regulated economy, progressive improvement in all that concerns the welfare of the nation, the continued diffusion of education among the people, and such well-considered reforms as from time to time may be required by changes of circumstances and by the increasing growth of intelligence.

On these grounds, I present myself to you, and I anticipate with confidence the result of the share which you are about to take in the solemn decision which the constituencies of the United Kingdom are about to pronounce.

I have the honor to be, gentlemen, your obedient and devoted servant. PALMERSTON.

News from South America.

BUENOS AYRES.

MODIFICATION OF THE LAW RESPECTING DIFFERENTIAL DUTIES—SETTLEMENT OF THE DIFFICULTY WITH THE BRITISH CONSUL—POLITICS—BUSINESS, &c.

Our advices from Buenos Ayres, received by way of England, are to the 1st of February.

The law respecting the differential duties had been modified by the authorities of the upper provinces, now allowing vessels to discharge part of their cargo at Buenos Ayres and at Montevideo, and then proceed up the river with the remainder; also considering Bahia, Blanca, and Castillo as foreign ports, owing la which the effect of the measure on the commerce of Buenos Ayres will be much less serious than was anticipated.

The Buenos Ayresn Government addressed a note to Her Britannic Majesty's Acting Consul-General, apologizing for their note of the 6th of January, 1853, to Hon. Capt. GORE, inclosing him his passport, and requesting that both the note and the passport might be considered as withdrawn. In consequence of this apology being accepted, the British flag was duly saluted at 1 P. M. on the 1st of February, which salute was returned by Her Majesty's ship Harrier.

The Money market had been very tight. Exchange opened at 72s. cash on London, and subsequently declined to 71s., at which it was maintained until the 11th of February, when some large amounts were done at 69s. and a short credit. Doubloons had gradually advanced from 331 to 341½ during the month.

"We are reduced in politics to the lowest ebb. Ministers and admirals pass and repass to and from the Parana, without deigning to take the least notice of us or speaking a civil word.

Admiral JOHNSON was here for a few days. No public—that is official notice was taken of his arrival, and we are not aware that he had any interview, public or private, with any member of the Government—a great change from the pelmy days when Mr. SOUTHERN was the confidential counselor of DON JUAN MANUEL ROSAS!

Our internal parties are at daggers drawn with each other; but there is a general determination to allow Dr. OBLIGADO to finish his legal term, and, fortunately, the revolutionary mania is fast falling into disrepute.

Our commercial affairs are quite paralyzed in view of the differential duties, aggravated by an immense overstock of goods that persons hardly know what to do with. Our situation is far from satisfactory as regards commercial interests and prospects.

In other respects the country is prosperous, and ought to be happy.

BRAZIL.

NEW MINISTRY—YELLOW FEVER—RAILWAY ENTERPRISE—MARKETS.

Dates from Rio are to the 28th of February, and from Pernambuco to March 3.

It was believed that a new Ministry would be formed before the opening of the Chambers in May next. Meantime there was nothing stirring in politics.

Yellow fever prevailed at all the ports, and at Bahia and Rio, principally among the shipping, of a very malignant type. The British mail steamer Tamar lost two men by this epidemic.

A letter from Rio, dated Feb. 24, says: "Peace reigns all over the empire."

The works of the first section of the Dom Pedro II. Railway are carried on with rapidity, and it is hoped that it will be opened to public traffic either in August or September. The second section is already marked out, and it crosses the great serra which separates the Paraiba Valley from the ocean currents. The plans will be ready in February. The Cordillera offers a maximum declivity of 1.55 in 19 miles distance—i. e., English miles, terminating in a tunnel of 1,950 feet; in the remaining part of it the declivities are not superior to 1.80. Tenders have been called for the construction of this section. Mr. ENWARD PRICE, we believe, will not enter in competition with any one who may appear. The directors, on their part, without any compromise for the first contract, give full liberty to all who may offer more advantages in such an undertaking.

Since the sailing of the French packet Byzantin to Marseilles, our markets have not presented much interest. Transactions have been made in exchange upon London for this mail (Tamar) at 27⅛ to 27⅛, 90 days' sight; Paris, 348, 90 days' sight; and Hamburg, 667, 90 days' sight. The total amount upon London is very important, and upon France and Hamburg of little consideration.

In freights little has been done, and we have to notice scarcely any alteration in the quotations by Byzantin. We have many ships in port, especially American.

COFFEE—Since the sailing of the Byzantin prices have undergone no variation, and we quote—washed, 5,500 to 6,200 reis; superior, 4,900 to 5,000 reis; 1st good, 4,700 to 4,800 reis; 1st ord., 4,300 to 4,500 reis. Stock about 100,000 bags."

Cold-Blooded Murder in Pittsburg.

From the Pittsburg Post, 8th.

Our city, early last evening, was startled with the report that a man had been shot in cold blood. The scene of the tragedy was a house on Union-alley, near Pennsylvania-av., kept by a woman named ANN WILCOX, alias JONES; the victim one WM. alias PHEBE CAMPBELL, and the murderer JAMES JONES, the reputed husband of the woman who keeps the house. At the time there were present in the house ANN WILCOX, her mother, and a partially deaf man named SAMUEL LYNCH, JAMES JONES and SARAH DOAKE, the first four in a room up stairs where ANN lay in bed, sick, and the latter down stairs attending to the affairs of the kitchen. A little after 5 o'clock, CAMPBELL came by the kitchen door and tried to get in, but SARAH refused him admittance until he said he wanted to see JONES. She then opened the door, and he went up stairs. He had scarcely got into the room where the party were when the report of a pistol was heard, and the unfortunate man fell mortally wounded, with a pistol ball through his brain. The pistol used was a Colt six-shooter. CAMPBELL lived less than an hour, but never spoke.

The Poor.

During the past Winter Superintendent RIPLEY has furnished temporary relief to 6,067 persons in the Eastern District of Brooklyn, at a cost of $6,066 49. Of the whole number thus supplied 1,143 were Americans.

NEW-YORK CITY.

Board of Councilmen.

The Board of Councilmen met yesterday. The President, J. N. PHILLIPS, Esq., in the Chair.

YORK ROAD.

Several petitions were presented. Among these was a petition signed by thirty property owners who state that "they are affected by connecting the Sixth-avenue with Broadway," requesting the Corporation to cause the necessary steps to be taken for the laying out of a public street (called York Road) to connect the Sixth-avenue with West Broadway.

Referred to the Committee on Streets.

RAILWAY IN SEVENTH AVENUE.

The Board concurred with the Board of Aldermen in a resolution of remonstrance with the Legislature against the formation of a railroad in Seventh-avenue.

TUNNELING BROADWAY.

A resolution was presented by Councilman SMITH, that it be referred to the Committee on Streets to inquire into and report upon the expediency of tunneling under Broadway from Courtland-street to Maiden-lane, and also under Broadway from Fulton-street on the east to Fulton-street on the west side of Broadway.

Referred to the Committee on Streets.

WIDENING OF ALLEN STREET.

A resolution was presented by Councilman B. REILLY, that the Committee on Streets be directed to inquire into the expediency of widening Allen-street on the west side, from the First-avenue to Division-street, and extend the same as so widened through to East Broadway.

Referred to the Committee on Streets.

MEMORIAL TO THE LEGISLATURE.

On the question that the Board concur with the Board of Aldermen in reference to the memorial to the Legislature adopted by that Board on Thursday, (and printed in our report of their proceedings.) A discussion arose as to the propriety of printing it in the minutes, and also in the "document form," a member said he thought the double expense unnecessary. On vote the Board concurred with the action of the Board of Aldermen, with one dissentient, Councilman BRADY.

RAILING AROUND TOMPKINS-SQUARE.

The Board concurred with the Board of Aldermen in reference to placing an iron railing around Tompkins-square.

ALTERING GRADES OF STREETS.

The report of a Committee on Streets, from the Board of Aldermen, amending the resolution of the Board of Councilmen, relative to altering the grades of Franklin-square, Cherry, Frankfort, Pearl, Hague and Vandewater streets, was referred to the Committee on Streets.

STREET-CLEANING—(SEVENTEENTH WARD.)

A resolution was adopted to demand of the Commissioner of Streets and Lamps why the streets of the Seventeenth Ward were not cleaned according to contract.

POTTER'S FIELD.

The report of the Committee on Public Health, in favor of removing the remains in Potter's Field, was referred to the Committee of the Whole.

MISCELLANEOUS MATTER.

The Board, having disposed of other miscellaneous matter, went into Committee of the Whole. Several medical accounts being presented, a discussion arose as to paying medical men for attendance at station-houses. It was said that the paid police surgeons ought to render the attendance and the bills of other physicians and surgeons unnecessary. Much contrariety of opinion was expressed on the subject. The matter was referred back to the Committee on Police.

Several reports on flagging, sewering, curbing, guttering and paving were forwarded in stage, after which the Committee rose.

THE GAS QUESTION.

The report of the Special Committee on the Manhattan Gas Company was presented for adoption and read.

Upon the following resolution (appended to that report) a discussion ensued:

Resolved, That the Counsel to the Corporation be, and he hereby is, directed to draft an act and submit the same to the Legislature, with a memorial soliciting the passage of a bill establishing a standard for the value or illuminating power of gas at 16 to 20 sperm candles, and that on Inspector of Meters be appointed to test their accuracy and to seal them upon much the same principle as Inspectors of Weights and Measures.

Upon which resolution Councilman B. REILLY offered the following amendment: "and also to prohibit any Gas Company, organized or to be organized, for the purpose of furnishing gas to the City, from being allowed to make any charge whatever for the use of meters."

The original resolution (as thus amended) was then adopted.

Councilman WARNER then submitted a resolution, which was adopted, "That the Corporation Counsel be directed to give his opinion as to the legality of the charge by the Companies for the use of their meters."

The Board then adjourned to Monday.

Coroners' Advice.

The Coroners have addressed a circular to the Dispensary doctors, imploring greater care on their part in giving certificates as to the cause of death. Good advice is no choice end scarce article—we hope the doctors will take it kindly, and act on it. But inasmuch as they have no legal authority to investigate doubtful cases, it is not strange that an occasional mis report should occur, even as Coroners paid for their services sometimes fail to elicit the whole truth, with all their "grand" facilities and appliances for "inquisition."

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

United States Court of Claims.

CLAIM FOR RETURN OF DUTIES UPON UNBLEACHED LINENS AS "COLORED LINENS."

Cortlandt Palmer, receiver of Leggett, Wooster & Frame vs. the United States. (On trial upon petition and proofs.) The petition alleges that L., W. & F., imported in January and February, 1836, from Liverpool into New-York, certain unbleached linens, and made due entry of the same for consumption, and entered the same on free entries, and described the same on their entries as "brown linen drills," "brown linen embossed," "¾ brown linens," (terms stated to signify unbleached linens, and also the particular kinds of linens,) and on making entry of the same, one of the firm made oath or affirmation, "That I have not, in the said entry or invoice, concealed or suppressed anything whereby the United States may be defrauded of any part of the duty lawfully due on the said goods, wares, and merchandize." It further alleges that the officers of the customs erroneously classed said imports with colored linens, and exacted the same rate per cent. of duty upon them that was by acts of Congress imposed upon colored linens. The duties paid amounted to $550 80. L., W. & F. protested against the exaction of duty on linens so imported and entered, claiming that they were by law admissible to entry for consumption free from duty under the acts of 1833.—(4 Statute at Large, p. 630.)

The only evidence offered to show that the linens were unbleached, and not colored, was that of Mr. F., one of the firm of L., W. & F., to whose "competency" the solicitor for the Government waived objections.

By the Court—SCARBURGH, J.—The solicitor has, in writing, waived "objections to Frame's competency," and we have only to consider the weight and effect of his testimony. Opposed to this is the official action of the Collector, entered of record, which, to say the the least of it, is, we think, entitled to equal weight with the testimony of this witness. How far in a case like this parol evidence can be received to contradict the official returns of the Collector, we do not deem it necessary now to consider. We are of the opinion that the allegations of the petitioner in this case as regards the character of the linens is not sufficiently sustained, and that the petitioner is therefore not entitled to relief.

John Michael vs. The United States.—(On trial upon the petition and facts)—In the years 1847 and 1848 the petioner imported into New-York large quantities of brandy. The quantities stated in the invoices exceeded the quantities ascertained by the returns of the gaugers, but he was required to pay, and did pay, duties on the former. The excess of those duties over the duties properly payable on the quantities actually imported was the sum of $381. This amount appears from an official statement accompanying the following certificate:

CUSTOM-HOUSE, NEW-YORK, July 31, 1856.

I certify that the excess of duties paid by Mr. John Michael, agreeable to the foregoing statement, amounts to $381; that the said duties have been accounted for to the Treasury, and no part thereof heretofore paid back; and that the party claiming does not appear on the records of the Custom-House as indebted to the United States.

HEMAN J. REDFIELD, Collector.

Countersigned:

JOHN ROMEYN BRODHEAD, Naval Officer.

The petitioner made no protest. It did not appear in evidence whether the brandy or any part of it was warehoused.

By the Court—SCARBURGH, J.—This case is, in principle, the same as the case of Sturges, Bennet & Co. Whether the brandy, or any part of it, was or was not warehoused is wholly immaterial; for in either event, the duties on the brandy not imported were illegally exacted, and paid involuntarily. We refer to our opinions in the case of Sturges, Bennet & Co., and in the case of David Wood, for the reasons on which this opinion is founded.

We are of the opinion that the petitioner is entitled to relief, and shall report to Congress a bill in his favor for the sum of $381.

BLACKFORD, J. dissented.†

CLAIM FOR LUMBER TAKEN AND USED FOR MILITARY WORKS AT PLATTSBURG—WHEN, IN TIME OF WAR, PRIVATE PROPERTY MAY BE TAKEN FOR PUBLIC USE.

George Ashley, Administrator de bonis non, &c., vs. The United States.—(On trial on petition and proofs.)

* Decisions by the Court of Claims were recently rendered on similar grounds, in favor of the following mercantile houses: Atkinson, Rollins & Co., of Boston, for $4,194; Samuel A. Way, of Boston, for $171; Wolfe & Co., of New-York, for $331; Alfred Atkins, of New-York, for $500; George W. Wales, of Boston, for $3,394.

† The sole ground for dissent was, that there was no "protest," written or verbal. The same Judge has uniformly, in all of this class of cases, dissented on the one purely technical ground of omission to make protest. The majority of the Court place their conclusion on grounds of right and justice, as between the importer and the Government, regarding the act of protest as an incident or form affecting, and intended to relate merely to the action against the Collector as agent of the Government.

Samuel Holgate, in 1814, under a written permit from the then Collector of the Customs for the Vermont District, undertook to transport a quantity of lumber. His raft, with ten barrels of tar and some other property, was taken near Isle la Motte or Vineyard, 16 or 18 miles south of the Canada line, on the waters of Vermont, by a row-galley of Com. McDonough's squadron, on the charge of being bound for Canada, and brought to Plattsburg. The Commodore delivered the property to the Collector of Champlain District, who caused it to be libeled in the District Court of the State of New-York. In due course it was condemned, no defence having been made.

Board and plank being required by the commanding officer at Plattsburg, the lumber libeled was delivered to the Quartermaster-General there, who paid the Marshal for it $416 80. This sum, deducting costs of the suit, was equally divided between the Commodore and collector. The tar and other articles were not delivered to the collector or libeled. After the arrival of the raft at Plattsburg, the lumber was conveyed by the teams of the United States to the camp ground there, and was used by order of the proper authority in the erection of the military works.

Commodore McDonough, subsequently, was sued for the seizure in a State Court in Vermont, by Holgate, but the suit was removed to the U. S. Circuit Court for that State, where a verdict and judgment were rendered for the defendant.

The petitioner claims as the representative of Holgate $1,187 51, and interest.

By the Court.—BLACKFORD, J.—Held: The seizure of the raft was made on waters navigable from the sea by vessels of ten or more tons burden, and was made within the district of Vermont; so the United States District Court for Vermont had exclusive jurisdiction of the case. The condemnation of the property, therefore, by the U. S. District Court for New-York was coram non judice and void.

2. The objection here, that a verdict and judgment were rendered in favor of Commodore McDonough in the suit against him by Holgate, is not tenable. The Government of the United States was not defendant in that suit.

3. In a case of joint trespassers, a judgment in favor of one of the trespassers, in a suit against him alone, is no bar to a suit against the other trespassers.

4. The objection that the Government purchased the property bona fide at the Marshal's sale, and paid the purchase money, is not well taken. The marshal's sale depends for its support upon the decree of condemnation rendered by the District Court in New-York. But that decree was rendered by a Court having no jurisdiction of the subject matter; and the sale was consequently void.

5. This case is within the principle, that in time of war a military officer, charged with a particular duty, may take and use private property for public use, when his doing so is necessary for the public service and the necessity is urgent.

6. Also, it is a case in which the Constitutional provision, (Amendments to Const. U. S. Art. 5,) that private property shall not be taken for public use, without just compensation, is strictly applicable.

7. For the other property seized, the tar, &c., the Government is not responsible. No emergency is shown which required the use of those articles for public purposes; nor is it proved that they were used for any such purpose.

8. If the owner was pursuing with them a lawful business, the Commodore might have been a trespasser, and personally liable for the seizure, but there would be, in such case, no legal liability on the part of the United States for the seizure.

9. The claim for interest is refused, on the ground that the well-established usage of the Government is not to pay interest in such cases. (Todd vs. The United States, in this Court. Devereux's R. 175.) Abstract of Opinion.

Judgment rendered in favor of claimant for $996 01, the value of the lumber, as proved.

Thomas Phenix, Jr., vs. The United States.—(On demurrer.)—This claim was referred to this Court by a resolution of the House of Representatives. The petitioner, as alleged, was employed as a Paymaster's Clerk, and served in that capacity with Col. Randall during the war with Mexico, at the salary of $900 per annum. The duties of Paymasters being very much increased, they were allowed by the Secretary of War to employ more clerks, at "a reasonable compensation." Many of the clerks resigned, and were reemployed at a compensation of $3 per day. The petitioner did not resign, but continued to perform his duties at his regular salary, under an assurance, in form of certificate from Col. R., "that he should be allowed increased compensation for his extraordinary services, and which, it was understood, had, in many cases, been allowed other Paymasters' clerks." Col. Larned, Acting Paymaster-General, also recommended the extra compensation.

Upon application, in 1852, to the Secretary of War, the petitioner was informed that the Department had no authority to allow his claim. The Secretary says: "Had you resigned your regular appointment and annual salary, and been reengaged by Col. Randall at $3 a day, that amount could now be paid you; or had Colonel Randall actually paid you at that rate, the payment would now be sanctioned by this Department, under the special authority given by an act of March 3, 1849: and in either case I should not hesitate to pass the account. But while you held the appointment of Paymaster's clerk, you were within the act of August 23, 1842, which prohibits all those whose pay is fixed by law or regulation to receive any additional pay, extra allowance, or compensation; and the act of 3d March, 1849, which would have authorized the Department to allow any extra compensation which might have been actually paid you, under the peculiar circumstances, by the proper disbursing officer, does not, under the settled construction adopted here, authorize the Secretary of War himself to make or order such payment at this time. For these reasons, however equitable the claim may be, I do not consider that I have authority to allow it."

Section 20 of the act of July 5, 1838, provides that the salaries of Paymasters' clerks shall not exceed five hundred dollars per annum each (5 Stat., 259.)

Section 2 of the act of August 23, 1842, (5 Stat., 510,) prohibits any person whose salary is fixed by law from receiving any additional compensation.

Section 2 of the act of March 3, 1849, (9 Stat., 413,) provides that all persons in public employment, who have received payment for their services in collecting, keeping, or accounting for moneys, and for other necessary services, are authorized to retain so much of the amounts so received, as, in the opinion of the President, may be a fair compensation for their services.

The petitioner claims to be allowed the difference between what he received and that to which he would have been entitled, had he resigned and been reemployed at increased pay, amounting to $1,173.

By the Court, GILCHRIST, C. J., Held: "The construction given by the Secretary of War to the acts (act of March 3, 1849, sec. 2, and act of Aug. 23, 1842, sec. 2,) is correct."

2. The 2d section of the act of March 3, 1849, refers to persons who have received payment for their services, and authorizes them to retain a fair compensation. This is the only section which would authorize any compensation to be made to the claimant, and he does not come within its provisions.

3. He has not received payment for his services, (except his salary of $900,) and consequently cannot retain any money which might be applied for the purpose of compensating him.

4. He is seeking payment, and there is no act of Congress which gives him a legal cause of action against the United States.—Abstract of Opinion.

(Adverse report.)

CLAIM FOR DREDGING MOBILE HARBOR—CONSTRUCTION OF CONTRACT.

Collier H. Minge et al. vs. The United States.—(On Demurrer.)—In 1838, as alleged, Minge and Ellicott made an agreement in writing with Capt. Barnard, of the Engineer Corps, the first clause of which provided for the building of certain steam-dredging machines, to be used in the excavation of the Dog River Bar, in the harbor of Mobile. By the second clause, the claimants agreed that they would cause such excavations to be made as might be required to be done by Captain B., or other agent of the United States, provided such excavations should not be carried deeper than twelve feet at low water. The third provided that the claimants should be paid 80 cents per cubic yard of earth excavated, the number of cubic yards to be ascertained by exact measurement, made by Captain B. or other agent, &c. Upon the back of the contract was this memorandum: "It is understood that the measurement shall be by the scow loads, if uniformly filled, and the work done to the satisfaction of said J. G. Barnard, or other agent of the United States; he reserving the privilege of testing the above measurement by soundings, and such other examination as he may think proper."

By the Court—BLACKFORD, J.—Held: The measurement, according to the memorandum, was to be by scow loads, if uniformly filled; and whether the measurement, when so made, was correct or not, might be tested by the Government agent by soundings and other examinations.

2. The right of the agent, reserved in the memorandum, was not to measure the work by soundings and other examinations, but to test, by any examinations he chose to make, the accuracy of the measurement made by scow loads.—Abstract of opinion.

Same vs. same.—(On trial on petition and proofs.)—In addition to the contract as alleged, the following facts appeared: Two steam dredges were employed in the work. The whole excavation amounted to 3,392 loads, at 25 cubic yards for each load, making 84,800 cubic yards, which, at 80 cents per yard, amount to $67,840. The amount actually paid by the Government on the contract was $47,497 20. Payment made, according to measurement by soundings, was protested against by the claimants as incorrect.

By the Court—GILCHRIST, C. J.—Held: As to the meaning of the contract, the excavations are to be measured by scow loads, and the agent of the United States had the right to test the measurement in any way he should think proper. He might test it, or he might not; but whatever test he might apply could not affect the provision that the measurement was to be by scow loads.

2. The memorandum on the contract is as substantial a part of the contract as any other part of it.

3. The provision in the contract, that the Government might test the measurement by soundings, would not authorize the Government to change the mode of measurement specified in the contract.

4. To test the measurement by soundings would not establish the soundings as the contract mode of measurement. The United States might make use of soundings for the purpose of showing that the number of scow-loads alleged to have been removed is incorrect.

5. The claimants are entitled, for the excavation actually made, deducting the amount received from the Government, to $30,623 80.—Abstract of opinion. (Bill reported accordingly.)

BLACKFORD, J., dissented.—The ground of dissent is, that the "proper construction was put upon the contract by the officers having charge of the work," that the measurement of soundings should govern. His Honor concludes: "When this case was formerly before the Court, on the preliminary question as to ordering testimony, my view of the contract was not the same with that which I have just expressed. With the aid of the testimony since taken I have re-examined the subject, and am now satisfied that the claimants are not entitled to recover."

SUPREME COURT—CIRCUIT.

Before Hon. Justice Peabody.

CONSTRUCTION OF INSURANCE POLICIES—INSURANCE ON THE CARGO OF THE GREAT REPUBLIC.

The Mercantile Mutual Insurance Company vs. The State Mutual Insurance Company of Pennsylvania.—The plaintiffs having risks on the ship Great Republic, her cargo and freight, in 1853, applied to defendants for reinsurance. Their application was in writing, and on the following terms:

"Reinsurance is wanted by the Mercantile Mutual Insurance Company for $——, on cargo on board of the ship Great Republic, at and from New-York to Liverpool; ex. 50,000 not to ex. 15,000.

This policy is to be subject to such risks, valuations and conditions as are or may be taken by the Mercantile Mutual Insurance Company, and payments of loss to be made at the same time.

NEW-YORK, Dec. 1, 1853."

This insurance the defendants agreed to make, and signified their engagement to do so by writing at the bottom of the paper the word "binding," and signing the memorandum thus, made "M. and P.," agents "State Mutual," (M. and P. being the initials of the names of the agents of defendants, through whom the contract was made,) and to this they acknowledge themselves bound.

It appeared on the trial that plaintiffs had insured less than $50,000 on the cargo of the ship, but that they had risks also on the freight and on the ship herself, which, added to the amount they had on the cargo, amounted to $65,000 and more.

By the Court—PEABODY, Justice.—The question in this case is, what did the defendants insure?

The meaning of the application, in several particulars, in which it was ambiguous, was proved or admitted by the parties.

Reinsurance was conceded to mean insurance to plaintiffs of risks they might have, "and ex. 50,000 not to ex 15,000," was admitted or proved to mean substantially "on the excess of risks plaintiffs might have over $50,000, not to exceed $15,000." The application was, therefore, in substance, for insurance to plaintiffs of such risks as they had or might take over and above the sum of $50,000, the amount of such reinsurance not to exceed, in any event, the sum of $15,000. Defendants, therefore, engaged to insure to plaintiffs such sums as they had insured or should insure to others, above the sum of $50,000, until such excess should amount to $15,000; but beyond that sum they did not agree, in any case, to become liable.

The insurance by defendants, it is also conceded, was limited to cargo, and no claim is made that they insured anything on the ship or freight.

About these matters there was no controversy.

Plaintiffs, however, claim that, in ascertaining what amount of risks they had, and how much, and whether anything over $50,000, so as to determine whether the insurance by defendants attached, and if so, to what extent, the whole of plaintiffs' risks on vessel, freight and cargo, are to be taken into the account; and that the insurance of defendants attached, when plaintiffs' risks on all three together exceeded that sum.

Whereas, defendants insist that their engagement was only to insure the excess plaintiffs might have over $50,000 on cargo alone—that, alone, being the subject of the application, and nothing else being suggested either in terms or by implication, as the subject of the risks of plaintiffs, in reference to the amount of which they contracted the re-insurance; and that any insurance the plaintiffs might have made on the ship or freight, is not to be taken into account in ascertaining the extent of their risks, with a view to determining what amount of insurance

KINGSLEY'S NEW NOVEL.

TWO YEARS AGO. By CHARLES KINGSLEY. Boston: TICKNOR & FIELDS. 1857.

What constitutes a good novel?

The question is worth considering, because it is essential to the criticism of a novel, and the criticism of novels is just now quite the most important branch of literary jurisprudence. For novels are more widely read, and more profoundly influence the education of the present generation than any other class of books. The condition of modern society makes this inevitable. We have very thoroughly killed off the amusements of our ancestors, but we have not extinguished human nature; we simply crowd our life into the brain as our forefathers crowded theirs into the muscles; and whereas they rejoiced in games and sports as rude and vociferous as their occupations were simple and unintellectual, we, on the contrary, must get our delight from inward visions and emotional excitements. With these the novel supplies us. It takes for us the place of the tennis-court and the May festival, of the pageantries and the pleasantries of other days.

This is the provocation to novel-reading, the sting of the demand. But it is not the full justification of that demand, nor the sufficient vindication of novel-writing. For the novel which appeases an ardent need of relaxation and relief does more than this. It can stimulate as well as soothe, and if the mature go to the novel for brief and bright delusions, the young go to the novel for glimpses of the yet untraveled world and its yet untried realities. Where business and the cares of life absorb (as where do they not?) the old, there the young will ask the novel for the hints, the beacons, the ideals of life. And the novelist, therefore, can never be permitted to forget that he is a teacher as well as a charmer; that where he means to amuse he will be also moulding, whether he means to mould or not. Critics may cant by the hour or the week about the "obtrusion of a moral," but they will never succeed in impressing the purely æsthetic doctrine of novel-writing on any man of genius, because no man of genius can help measuring his responsibilities by his own instincts rather than by somebody's else theory.

A good modern novel then may be briefly defined to be a fictitious picture of human life, so drawn as to be at once interesting and instructive. According to this definition (which we have no intention, be it understood, of laying down and defending in any fierce and formal way,) a novel differs from a romance, by dealing with human life alone, and by presenting the probabilities of human life. The writer of a romance may people his book with all manner of impossible creatures, elves, pixies, fairies, giants, or devils—or he may so represent his human beings as to make them seem like Bedivere in the Morte d'Arthur, "larger than human on the frozen hills," refracted, distorted, or even diminished from the just stature and dimensions of mortality. Of pure romances there are but few that are good, and such are not to be asked for confidently in the first bookshop, nor expected of the first author that one meets. TIECK'S Undine is a romance of the first kind, and perhaps the best romance ever written, for while the atmosphere of the book is so unearthly as to elevate the pitch of our perceptions into a spiritual key, the attributes of the characters appeal most directly to our warmest human sympathies; Mrs. SHELLEY'S Frankenstein; BALZAC'S Recherche de l'Absolu and Peau de Chagrin; and BULWER'S Zanoni, are all romances of the second kind, in which we recognize such dilation and demonizing of human nature, that we cannot evade the fascination of the phantasmagoria which we yet never mistake for a picture.

The writer of a novel, on the other hand, must tell us the story of certain human souls, and he must make us feel that story to be a probability of human life, either past or present. Of course, therefore, circumstances are quite at his mercy, and his law is laid down to him, not by your experience or mine, but by the conditions of your nature and mine.

The circumstances in which Robinson Crusoe, for instance, passes his life, are neither familiar nor even very probable; but the story of Robinson Crusoe is a wonderfully fine novel, because it is a close and living picture of a man's experience in a very unusual career, while Mr. HARRISON AINSWORTH'S novel of Jack Sheppard is a very bad novel indeed, because it is an absurd caricature of every-day facts, and a gross misrepresentation of an experience by no means as uncommon as one could wish it were. So, too, Jane Eyre is a good novel, because though the circumstances in which Jane Eyre is placed, and some of the characters by whom she is surrounded partake of the atmosphere of romance, and the book is in so-far inartistic and incomplete, yet the story of the heroine developes an intensely faithful picture of human life in one of its most pathetic varieties; whereas the "Minerva Press" novels, that were so dear to our mothers, and the "religious" novels, that are so cheap to ourselves, are ridiculously bad novels, because while they represent the utmost commonplace of circumstance with distracting fidelity they swarm with so-called human beings as unhuman and as unreal as the creatures that children snip out of white paper with scissors.

The best novels of Captain MARRYAT again are admirable novels, because though they treat us only to the salient points and striking episodes of nautical life, and so convey, on the whole, an altogether visionary view of the realities of existence on board ship, they at the same time are filled with the results of that life in the form of consistent and actual naval characters, and so afford a real glimpse of particular human experiences. And such a novel as BALZAC'S Eugénie Grandet, or CHARLES DE BERNARD'S Gerfaut, is a novel of the highest rank, because while the particular process of events, by which the desertion of "Eugénie Grandet," and the subsequent penalties inflicted on her lover, or the development of the relation of Gerfaut to De Bergenheim and Clémence, is brought about, can hardly be adjudged probable, yet in the one case, as in the other, the characters treated are developed from within in a manner so exactly corresponding to the psychological necessities of their assumed conditions, as to make the works the most vivid possible pictures of human life, when unfolded under such conditions.

Now, if we take up the lantern of this definition of ours, and go about looking for a good novelist, in what Englishman of our generation shall we find the qualities essential to that character more solidly and brilliantly combined than in CHARLES KINGSLEY?

Not in Mr. THACKERAY, for that masterly artist has a less universal, a less hopeful sympathy with human nature, and consequently a less absolute insight into human character than the author of Yeast and Hypatia.

Not in Sir EDWARD BULWER, for though nothing can be more absurd than to question the power displayed in such books as Pelham and Ernest Maltravers, BULWER has shown himself to possess in the highest degree only two of the essential characteristics of the novelist—vividness in the conception of character, and skill in the construction of his plots, while he lacks genial humanity to enrich his vivid conceptions, and the profound good sense of healthy passion to rule his skillful plots into a true resemblance of human life.

Still less in Mr. DICKENS, who is hardly a novelist at all, immense as is his present popularity, since his pictures of human life are not pictures of human life, but sketches of people as they strike an observer of very peculiar character, and no more truly represent a probable series of human experiences than GEORGE CRUIKSHANK'S picture of "Boxing-Day," for instance, represents a probable group of Englishmen, assembled and brought together on that interesting occasion in a particular part of London. The wonderful qualities of Mr. DICKENS' genius are not the qualities of a great writer of fiction, but rather those of a dramatic essayist, as we might very satisfactorily establish were space and time presently favorable to us.

The author of Peg Woffington and Never Too Late to Mend, though in him, too, the dramatist and the essayist unduly predominate over the pure novelist, has nevertheless given proof of higher ability in this specific direction than Mr. DICKENS, but he has not manifested such resources of genius as to compel from us a modification in his favor of the proposition which we have advanced.

We repeat it, therefore, that we find in Mr. KINGSLEY a warm humanity of character, (not philanthropy, remember, by any manner of means!) a vivid power of reproducing his impressions to himself in the form of conceptions, a skill in the arraying together of images and the development of relations, and a wealth of English words quite unsurpassed. Add to these gifts something, (without which, indeed, these gifts could hardly have been combined in one man,) a passionate sincerity and dignity of character, and you will see that whatever the faults of Mr. KINGSLEY'S novels may be, their merits must be of the very highest order.

Concede the improbability that a young tailor however maddened by chartism and diseased genius, should come to live and talk as Alton Locke lives and talks, and yet what absolute truth to the intellectual life of the Nineteenth Century there remains in the words and ways of that unhappy person! what close and terrible fidelity glows in the pictures of the miserable life of his early associates; what admirable reality you find in the character of "Sandy Mackaye," with his good sense, his veracity, his exacting exactness, his rough charity, his secret sympathies, and his shrewd dialectics!

Yeast, Hypatia, Amyas Leigh, all are at least as remarkable as Alton Locke for the truth with which the probabilities of human nature are preserved in them. In treating the most romantic plots Mr. KINGSLEY never loses his love of reality or his hold upon it; and consequently never lets go his grasp upon the attention and the interest of his reader. You may quarrel with his evident views as savagely as you please, but you must at least find out what becomes of this people!

If this is true of a book in which he professes to be telling you the story of Alexandrian Greeks, or fillibustering Britons of Queen ELIZABETH'S time, how much more true must it be of a book like Two Years Ago, in which he deals with the living interests, with the living men and women of our day! Two Years Ago is indeed the finest novel which Mr. KINGSLEY has written—the most complete in point of construction, the most splendid in point of style, and, to our thinking, at once the most solemn and the most interesting in point of purpose. The central idea of the book is simply this:—to develop the influence upon individual character and individual life, of a great crisis of national trial and patriotic duty. This idea, of course, explains the title, by which we are put at once face to face with England in the moment of her sorest and sharpest need, when by the "Shores of the Black and the Baltic deep

It explains, too, the introduction into the novel of an American, upon whom the impending conflict of principles, which the least thoughtful and the most timid of us all have been compelled of late to feel that we could not escape, is to exert a like though a deeper influence, with England's discipline of foreign war and honorable sorrow. The analogies and applications which flame forth from this central idea into the private world of each man's life we need not dwell upon, for a moment's reflection will reveal to the reader their reality and their vast importance. This is the light in which Mr. KINGSLEY has chosen to set his picture. As a picture, what shall we say of it?

We grant at the outset that Mr. KINGSLEY, like almost all other novelists, has woven together the relations of his characters more closely and visibly than they would probably have been woven together in life—but the characters themselves are drawn with a marvellous truth and finished subtlety. No living Englishman, excepting Mr. THACKERAY has ever dared to paint heroes so unheroic, but Mr. KINGSLEY'S unheroic heroes are heroes after all, and neither throw down the cross nor miss the crown, while Mr. THACKERAY'S subside at last, as we all too well know, and look their last look of decent skeptic despair at us over the walnuts and the wine.

In all the group to which Mr. KINGSLEY introduces us in Two Years Ago, there is not one perfect person, and not one you can refuse to feel for and to pity at last, save those whom at last you come to love and honor with all your heart. The self-helpful, unbelieving, rejoicing vigorous Tom Thurnall, who roams the world over to learn the deepest lesson of life at last in a lone Crimean prison—the vain, gifted, morbid Elsley Vavasour and Briggs, who changes his name but not his nature, and makes his poor, dear, little wife, utterly miserable, and dies at last of selfishness and opium, leaving to the world his imperfect poem, and in the reader's mind a sort of pityiug, angry tenderness—the noble-hearted, over-educated Frank Headley, who flowers out through love at last into a brave, beautiful life—these are not all simply possible men, but most real men, who go through the book, each on his own business, talking, acting and thinking according to the every-day life of men who are not every-day men, and interesting you as they would interest you if you met them in the flesh. Not less real are the American Stangrave, fastidious, hesitating, clever, and, at bottom, passionately a man after all—and the charming, kindly, generous artist, Claude Mellot, while the subordinate people who come and go bring air and sunlight with them, just as the innumerable people do who pass through Pendennis, Vanity Fair, and the Newcomes.

But still more striking are the female characters of this novel. On this ground Mr. KINGSLEY stands alone. No Englishman since Sir WALTER SCOTT has drawn such women as he; but in the best of SCOTT'S best women we miss a certain indescribable quality, the absence of which makes women smile over most male pictures of their sex, as the presence of it makes them open their eyes with wonder over such pages, for instance, as those of BALZAC; and this quality is always present in the women whom Mr. KINGSLEY draws. It is the added charm which seals the truth of the drawing; you recognize it in the heroine of the Saint's Tragedy, as in the stately Argemone—in the much abused Honoria and the noble Eleanor Stanton—but above all is it conspicuous in the Valencia of Two Years Ago. Nor only in her—the brilliant, beautiful, wayward, capricious, and altogether lovable Valentia—but in the hapless and not very interesting, but dolefully real Lucia—in the sweet, fanatical, ignorant, half-inspired Grace, (a character so absolutely true to nature, that we dare say half the critics will never believe it drawn from life)—in the patient, high-souled, devoted, unloved Mary Armsworth—in the fascinating Sabina, and even in the passionate, essentially theatrical Marie, this womanly reality glows. The cleverest female writers of the day, Mrs. GASKELL, CHARLOTTE BRONTE herself, have not shown more power of painting their own sex than has Mr. KINGSLEY. His love scenes are quite as remarkable for delicacy as for insight, if indeed insight be not the condition of delicacy!

Such being the figures which Mr. KINGSLEY has evoked, the landscapes in which he sets them are worthy of them and of his own now conceded superiority as a descriptive writer. It is no slight indication of the dignified and noble earnestness of this author, by the way, that he should make so little display of a power which he must feel himself to possess in a degree almost unrivalled. The splendors of scenery-painting which he used so successfully in Amyas Leigh, to hide a great but necessary gap in the hero's adventures, are utterly subordinated in Two Years Ago to the movement of the story, and simply intervene as superb accessories.

The digressions which must be expected from a man surcharged with all sorts of intellectual electricity, are carried off very happily into conversations between the characters, which do not interrupt the progress of the story, and contribute immensely to the vraisemblance of the picture.

The story, itself, is intensely interesting; too interesting, by far, for us to cheat our readers of its charm by a bald analysis. The fourfold plot is managed with singular adroitness and force, and will appear complicated only to those who miss the dominant idea of the work, or fail to rise into its spirit. The introductory chapter, however, though full of good sense and of sound feeling, and especially valuable to all true Americans, is not very gracefully connected with the body of the story, and had better be read independently of the novel, which is complete without it.

On the whole, then, if we must repeat our own question, "What constitutes a good novel?" we do not see how we can avoid recapitulating almost all that we have said in praise of Two Years Ago. It is a novel—for it is a story of human life and of most probable mortal men and women—it is good, for the spirit of the book is as noble and its influence as inspiring as its substance is interesting. Whoever reads it will find himself not taken out of the world of human emotions, and sufferings and enjoyment, but taken up into the atmosphere of men who rule their own spirits, love their fellows, hate not even the imbecile and the wicked, rejoice in all grand and beautiful things—in the shout of heroes and the swift gallop of horses, in the smile of women and the glory of God's wonderful world—in truth, and honor, and faith—in wit, and courage and love.

☞ Proposed amendments to the Constitution of the State of Massachusetts reduce the number of Representatives from 438 to 240, and provide for the election of 40 Senators from forty districts, all containing an equal number of legal voters. The amendments have passed the House, and are pending in the Senate. Another amendment proposes to exclude persons who cannot read and write from the privileges of voting and holding office.

From the Evening Post.
A good many editions of Scott have been published; and we recollect many more expensive than this, but nothing so good in the way of an impression for the mass of readers; nothing so perfectly faultless in its mechanical execution.
From the New-York Tribune.
Ticknor & Fields announce a beautiful family edition of the "Waverley Novels," in forty-eight 18mo volumes. From the specimens which we have seen of this work we can confidently recommend it. It is illustrated by designs from the most eminent artists, including Birket Foster, Darley, Landseer, Harvey and Read, in admirably executed steel engravings, and contains all the author's latest notes and corrections. The typography is in the style of simple elegance for which the Boston press is distinguished. The size of the volumes is just right; the binding admirable for its strength as well as neatness; the paper excellent; the type clear and elegant; the illustrations executed in a style honorable, in the highest degree, to the progress of American art. We rejoice to learn that the publishers are reaping the just harvest of this enterprise.

This edition must, of necessity, from its cheapness and sterling merit, supersede all other editions which have been published in this country.

This work is not a mere repetition under a new form of old plots, characters and incidents—but one that possesses the distinguishing characteristic of originality in all these particulars. Its subject is as universal as the air we breathe, and the evils it vividly portrays will serve as guiding lights for tens of thousands who might otherwise be led into sorrowful relations with those about them. It exhibits in the broad, noonday light of God's truth the Rights of Humanity—the innate sentiment of virtue of every soul—proves conclusively that trials, however severe, refine the spirit, and that
"Ever the Right comes uppermost,
And ever is justice done."
THE INDEPENDENT, NOBLE TONE
that pervades every chapter;
THE FREE, UNTRAMMELED EXPRESSION
of Thought that will distinguish it from the libraries of books now emanating from the American Press;
THE ENTRANCING PICTURES OF THE BEAUTIFUL,
and the
VIVID CONTRAST OF RIGHT AND WRONG,
will at once commend the book to the
HEARTS AND HOMES OF THE PEOPLE.
It needs but to be read to be admired, and whenever one reads it, a score will be sure to follow.
It is presented to the public resting solely on its own intrinsic merits, INDEPENDENT OF THE PRAISE OR CENSURE OF CRITICS—in full confidence that all who admire the spiritually true, and an effort to raise the fallen, will give to it a soul-welcome into the great field of Humanity.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

It is understood in Washington that Hon. Wm. B. Reed will certainly accept of the China Mission, although the Administration has not yet been officially informed of the fact.

The State Senate yesterday passed the bill relative to the election of Police and Civil Justices in the City and County of New-York. In the Assembly, the bill making it a misdemeanor for any person to squat on vacant lots in any city or incorporated village was passed. During the evening session of the Assembly, Mr. Beckwith, of Washington, in the course of debate, alluded to an article in the Albany Knickerbocker in reference to Governor King, and characterized its writer as a political scavenger. Mr. Hastings, the Editor of that paper, at the close of Mr. Beckwith's remarks, approached him with threatening language, when Mr. Beckwith struck him. The greatest excitement ensued, which was finally quelled, and Mr. Beckwith subsequently apologized to the House. A Committee of Investigation will inquire into the transaction.

The bill in regard to the Marine Court has now become a law. It provides that all summons, &c., issued from the Court can be served by any person not a party in interest. This is the same rule which prevails in other Courts, and cuts off the numerous tribe of constables who have taken up their abode in the upper hall of the new Court House, and have brought much discredit on the Court, where it did not belong. The constables are elected by the people, and are independent of the Court. The law, also, provides that all pleadings are to be in writing, and are to be verified under oath. This, also, will put a stop to much abuse. But lastly, the law provides that all executions issued by the Court are to be levied under by the Sheriff instead of the same tribe of constables before alluded to.

There is now a bill before the Senate, having passed the Assembly, to combine the various acts in regard to the New-York District Courts into one act. One section increases their jurisdiction on promissory notes, &c., to $250, and provides that the salary of the Justices shall be the same as that of the Justices of the Marine Court, viz. $6,000, an increase of $1,000. The bill, also legislates the Clerks of these Courts into office for six years more.

In to-day's Daily Times we publish a variety of European intelligence, derived from our foreign files by the City of Manchester, which arrived at this port yesterday morning. From present appearances, Lord Palmerston will certainly be sustained in the approaching general election His address to his constituents is a clear and concise review of the foreign policy of his Government, and his promises with regard to reform and economy at home completely cut away the ground from under his opponents' feet. An article from the London Times on our amended Tariff, published among our extracts, will attract attention.

By the way of England we receive advices from Buenos Ayres to the 1st, and from Rio de Janeiro to the 25th of February. From Buenos Ayres we learn that there has been a modification of the law with regard to differential duties by which ships can discharge part of their cargo at Montevideo and Buenos Ayres, and proceed up the river with the remainder. At Rio the yellow fever still prevailed to an alarming extent; but at Pernambuco it had almost disappeared. It was expected that a new Brazilian Ministry would be formed in May. At Rio the ecclesiastical authorities had pronounced the children of Protestants illegitimate, and a great sensation had been caused in consequence. The law, it is said, will be altered immediately.

A correspondent of the Richmond Enquirer denies the correctness of the representations that are current in regard to the improvement of Virginia farming lands by Northern labor. He states that in Fairfax County, where old estates which had been exhausted were bought at low prices and settled by Northern emigrants, the experiment has proved an utter failure. The lands were not improved,—the products of the farms were meagre, and the purchasers were glad to sell out to new emigrants who had been induced to go thither by the glowing but entirely unfounded accounts published of them in agricultural and other newspapers. He states also, that as a general thing, the Northern people who have come into Virginia are less intelligent, less enterprising and less disposed to educate their children than the people of Virginia themselves. He thinks that if the land of Virginia is ever to be redeemed it must be by some other agencies than these.

The proceedings of the Board of Councilmen, yesterday, presented some features of peculiar interest. The project of tunneling under Broadway assumes shape, a petition being presented by Councilman Smith to inquire into and report upon its expediency,—the lower part of the City being the first selection for the proposal. The report of the Committee on the gas question was presented for adoption. Councilman Warner proposed an amendment, to ask opinion of counsel as to the legality of the charge for the use of meters; and Councilman Reilly proposed a resolution, that no gas company should in future be allowed to make any charge for the use of meters. The original resolution, appended to the report, was carried as amended by the passage of both amendments.

The Committee on Streets met for the purpose of discussing the propriety of widening Robinson-street, but nothing was reached. An adjournment to Monday week was agreed on.

The Committee on the Worth Monument have visited the site. The specification as to the intended monument shows that it will form a permanent ornament to the upper part of the City.

It is understood that Mayor Wood, in anticipation of the final action of the Legislature on the Metropolitan Police Bill, yesterday made a large number of police appointments, and reappointed several captains whose terms had expired, and who have since been "holding over" to abide anticipated events. We understand that among those so appointed were Capt. Dilks, of the Fifth Ward, and Ackerman, of the Ninth.

The condition of the streets was not improved by the heavy showers of rain which commenced falling at 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon and continued till nightfall. Still, compared with their condition a few weeks ago, the down-town streets are clean. The pavements are visible on nearly all of them, and the huge barricades of mud that remained so long in Centre-street have been removed. Our up-towners fare worse. The contractors there have not gone to work with remarkable vigor, intimidated, perhaps, by the neglect of the Common Council to confirm the contracts.

The Street Commissioner has contracted out in short sections First-avenue on each side of Jones' Woods, and promises that it shall be in order for the public this Summer. In Jones' Woods the work of grading the streets also goes on rapidly. Several of the streets that cross this ancient forest are under contract to be opened in two months from this time.

The sailing of the frigate Niagara has been delayed by an accident to her machinery. At 6 o'clock yesterday morning, just as the engine was put in motion, and before her anchor had been weighed, one of the cylinder-heads was found to be cracked, rendering it necessary to defer sailing until a new one can be put in its place. This will be done in the course of a week, when—if nothing else occurs to prevent—she will leave on her trial trip.

James B. Shaw, captain, and Peray Farnell, mate, of the schooner Martha, were arrested yesterday charged with running away with this schooner and selling the cargo. They were committed for examination.

Mrs. Cora V. L. Hatch delivered a lecture on "Spiritualism," last night, in the Tabernacle, the proceeds of the tickets to be devoted to charity. Captain Rynders took a prominent part in the proceedings, which were somewhat interesting.

On Sunday forenoon, the extensive tannery near Tunkhannock, carried on by Mr. Asa Eaton of Rondout, in connection with Messrs. Young & Schultz of this City, was burned down. Three thousand sides of leather, all dressed and ready for sale, were consumed. The loss is estimated at about $40,000; insured for $23,000.

The Dred Scott Case at Albany.

We publish to-day the report of the Senate Committee appointed to consider the measures proper to be adopted by the Legislature of this State "to protect the constitutional rights of her citizens against the serious and alarming doctrines of the Supreme Court of the United States in the decision of the Dred Scott case;" as well as the resolutions recommended by that Committee, and a bill drawn up by them to meet the exigency of the occasion. We have little fault to find with the report, excepting that it treats as a "decision of the Supreme Court" the "expressed opinions of five Pro-Slavery Judges" upon five points foreign to the record of the case before the Court, and consequently confers upon these opinions a gravity and dignity which we do not conceive them to possess. The same objection applies to the Resolutions, of which the second is an affirmation that the Supreme Court has lost the confidence and respect of the people of this State, in consequence of the identification of a majority of the Judges with a sectional and aggressive party. But the Bill itself, which is the most practical result of the labors of the Committee, deserves the unqualified support of the citizens of New-York. It conveys a reaffirmation of the sovereign right of the State of New-York to decide upon the qualifications of her citizens, and to pronounce upon the tenure of property within her limits.

Such a Bill the Legislature of New-York have an undoubted right to pass—and such a bill it is their duty to pass at a time when the high prerogatives and inherent sovereignty of the great State which they represent have been threatened with invasion.

But we cannot understand in what way the exercise of this right and the performance of this duty can borrow additional solemnity from the fulmination of a decree of contempt against the Supreme Court of the United States.

If the objectionable five points of what has been somewhat prematurely entitled the "Dred Scott decision," are indeed, as the Committee report them to be, the mere obiter dicta of five indiscreet, intemperate and unjust judges, then they do not constitute a decision of the Supreme Court, and should not bring that tribunal under the ban of the Legislature of New-York. If on the other hand they are a decision of the Supreme Court, then the Supreme Court has made an assault upon the sovereignty of the State of New-York which is not to be repelled with contemptuous language, but to be rebuked by such stern, quiet and decisive action as becomes the most powerful State of the American Union.

No power on earth can establish Slavery in the State of New-York. No power on earth can introduce Slavery into the State of New-York, and no power on earth can successfully invade the sovereignty of this Commonwealth. The utmost that is required of us then in the actual condition of affairs, is such a deliberate and conclusive action on the part of the Legislature as shall make it perfectly plain to the whole world that we distinctly understand our Constitutional rights, and that we propose to maintain them. We do not believe that any weight can be added to such action by declamatory language—or by menaces hurled at enemies of whom we are not sure that they have attacked us—nor even that they mean to attack us. The imperial State of New-York, proclaiming her absolute rights, should do so with the temperance of power. "An act to secure freedom to all persons within this State" is not the measure of a party, but the voice of a mighty Commonwealth; and it should be uttered with every circumstance of decorum, of forbearance, and of force.

Another Parker Vein Spasm.—The Herald has another fainting fit about the Times. There seems to be no end to the intolerable sufferings which the Parker Vein "historian" is fated to endure at the hands of this establishment. He can neither see, nor hear, nor think, nor dream of anything else. The ghost of the Times seems to haunt him always and everywhere. If anything extraordinary happens in politics, finance, or nature, the proprietors of the Times are responsible for it. They broke Jacob Little. They tore down the old Brick Church. They have kept the Country from going to the ruin to which the Herald had doomed it. They buy and sell all that is bought and sold in Wall-street. They make and lose all the money that is made and lost. They are at the bottom of whatever happens—as a great many things do happen,—which the "historian" doesn't like.

Their latest enormity is a scheme to build a railroad down Greene-street and West Broadway. Somebody has got up such a project in the Legislature. The Herald didn't hear of it until everybody else had done talking about it—and then all of a sudden the decayed fossils of that concern started up to a consciousness of the fact. Their bewilderment was like that of a bat by daylight. They suppose it to be a scheme for a railroad in Broadway,—and, as a matter of course, the Times is at the bottom of it! The Times has no more to do with it than it had with Potosi or Parker Vein. It neither knows nor cares anything about the scheme,—except what it learns through the ordinary channels of information. We have the advantage over the Herald of knowing that Greene-street is not Broadway,—but that is one, not to any interest in a railroad through either, but to diligent and persevering study of the City Map.

Meantime the case of the Herald is alarming. These spasms of terror will prove fatal one of these days. They have already had such an effect upon the rickety, broken-down constitution of the concern that it shakes and shivers at every mention of the Times. Unless something strengthening is administered the fall of the Old Brick Church steeple, or any sudden crash of that sort, will finish him. If somebody will hold camphor to his nose half an hour a day,—or if old Doctor Bone will send him a bottle of his celebrated liniment, we will pay the bill. We don't relish the prospect of having upon our souls the responsibility of the death of quite so old a sinner,—especially if it is to happen, as seems likely, suddenly.

"Entangling Alliances."

The measures finally decided upon by the Administration in regard to the Chinese difficulty are not only to be commended as an exhibition of practical good sense in dealing with a specific case, but as indicating also a disposition on the part of the Government towards a more sagacious and statesmanlike policy than the platforms of the Democratic Party or the practices of Mr. Buchanan's predecessor had prepared us to expect. It would really seem as if we were to be in a measure delivered from the tyranny of words, and inducted into the freedom of principles.

The whole system of our foreign relations has been vitiated, belittled and reduced to comparative inefficiency for many years past by a bigoted and insane adherence on our part to the traditionary doctrines of a former generation, as embodied in phrases which no longer preserve, or can preserve, their original significance, and have become as false and fatal in their application to the actual situation and present wants of the United States as they were true and beneficial on the lips and in the thoughts of our fathers.

While the Republic was in its infancy, oppressed by a weight of financial embarrassments, and as yet uncertain of the future, the statesmen of America shrank with a salutary fear from the prospect of involving the destinies of the young nation in the formidable strifes of the French Revolution, and they did their best to impress upon the popular mind such a horror of "entangling alliances" as should preserve us from committing ourselves to the policy of either of the contending parties to those tremendous conflicts. This it was not difficult to do. For the colonial character was not to be put off as easily as the colonial condition, and the inhabitants of English America had been so long accustomed to see the question of peace or war for themselves decided by causes beyond their own control, and to find themselves engaged in sanguinary hostilities because the European Power to to which they owed allegiance had been drawn into a quarrel with its neighbors, that they easily acquiesced in a policy of isolation.

But the lapse of sixty years has worked a wonderful change in our internal estate and in our external relations. We have passed from a position of uncertain aspiration to one of imperial dignity. From a batch of impoverished and insulated ex-colonies we have grown into a confederation of magnificent and powerful States, holding in our own hands the sufficient assurance of our fortunes and of our liberties. With the expansion of our resources and our importance, our conceptions of a national policy should have expanded also; and we should have risen above the petty jealousies, as we have surmounted the positive dangers, of a subordinate station. No alliance could now "entangle" us to our serious detriment, and the danger most apparent in our foreign relations, in this fifty-seventh year of the Nineteenth Century, is that we may make ourselves hopelessly ridiculous by the display of traits which would be pardonable in the people of of Montenegro or of Mexico, but do not much beseem the first commercial nation of the world.

The time has gone by when Europe and civilization were synonymous terms. The United States cannot, if they would, hold themselves aloof from the great political and commercial system of Christendom, and it certainly cannot redound either to our credit or our profit that we should show ourselves incapable of appreciating our joint obligations with other powers to the commerce of mankind. If the condition of things in China warrants the interference of England and of France to bring the Chinese Government to reason in its dealings with foreigners, the United States cannot hold back from a just and pacific exercise of their influence for the same object, because it is contrary to our hereditary policy for us to entangle ourselves in alliances with European States. We have a right, on the contrary, and it is even our duty, to insist that our voice shall be heard and our counsels respected in the conduct of a negotiation of which the consequences will be hardly less important to ourselves than to England, and much more important than they can be to France.

We repeat, therefore, that we rejoice in the present action of our Government, as an indication of the probable prevalence in the Washington Cabinet of more enlarged and statesmanlike views than have heretofore been taken of our foreign policy, and we do not doubt that the results of Mr. Reed's mission will amply indicate the wisdom of the course adopted by Mr. Buchanan.

An Ominous Beginning.—We put no faith in omens, but yet we regret the accident to the machinery of the Niagara, yesterday, the more, as it happened just as she was starting on her trial-trip, after being commissioned to assist in laying the cable of the Atlantic telegraph. It is a bad sign, too, for the ship; for the breaking of the cylinder head, which caused her detention, appears to have been caused by the miserable quality of the iron of which it was composed. There was no unusual pressure upon it, and it broke from no other cause than the wretched quality of the material. If one such piece of iron found its way into the machinery of this noble vessel, there may be others, and it would be hardly proper for her to be employed in such an important service as that of laying the telegraph cable until her machinery had been thoroughly tested.

Our Municipal Horizon.

Those who set out in pursuit of a questionable object by means involving the connivance—whether criminal or unconscious—of a large number of accomplices, should see well to it, before embarking on the desperate course, that their success is not only certain but irreversible; and that no misfortunes can overtake them to relax that discipline which is only the homage of inferior villainy to skill. With both hands full of booty—the scuttled and pillaged vessel settling quietly amid the silence of the waves—his own sails filled, and the pennant of no hostile frigate fluttering menace above the horizon, the captaincy of pirates is a post of almost absolute command. But let the cruise become unprofitable—the prizes few or worthless—the provisions scant, the water tainted, and danger hovering round the seas,—then every ruffian from the forecastle struts back to question his commander, and the kidnapped or reluctant of the crew take heart for a more vigorous remonstrance. Guilt finds its only toleration in success: at the first semblance of defeat every flatterer deserts, every sycophant betrays, and every trembling participant hastens to force back the responsibility on the organizer and contriver of the whole. These considerations are appropriate to a review of the present political condition of our City.

The firmness of Mr. Buchanan deprived our municipal freebooters of those expected argosies—the Federal appointments. Provisions have run short since the Mayor's defeat at Washington; the action of the Sachems cuts them off from the pure fountains of Democracy; and, last and heaviest blow of all, the Recorder's charge to the Grand Jury sounds an alarm from the only quarter that has power to enforce its threats. The discipline of the civic conspiracy seems broken; and from the criminations and recriminations, already rising high, and losing prudence as anger gets the mastery, we may hope for a thorough exposition of the men and machinery under whose united action we have been ruled and robbed, coerced and scorned as never City was before, during the past few years.

Since the publication of that Charge, and our comments thereon in last Saturday's issue, we have been literally inundated with a mass of corroborative and explanatory information—statements, instances and examples—all sweeping onward in the same portentous current towards the same central point; and all coinciding with the drift of the dark, though guarded, suggestions contained in the Recorder's message. Some of these are anonymous, though giving names and dates for every infamy denounced: others are signed by responsible parties, but evidently only tell half the truth, and color what is told to secure the private immunity of the writers, who are, more or less, accomplices, with a guilty knowledge. Some have the air of overburdened consciences seeking relief in the confessional; and others yet again are just as clearly the offspring of personal disappointment and rancor,—the complaints of subordinates, dead to every sense of shame, and willing to be condemned themselves for the satisfaction of denouncing those by whom they were hired and used, and afterwards thrown aside,—either without the promised reward, or with a reward inferior to their expectations.

These crude and heterogeneous materials require rigid sifting and analysis before it would become us to put them forward in a condensed and connected shape:—it is only by comparing one with the other, and striking an average between the ostensible coloring of a certain public act, and the confessions or accusations of those who pretend to give its occult significance and the hidden influences at work behind the official curtain,—it is only by an impartial hearing of both sides, where both have been confessedly guilty, that we can arrive at results not calculated to do more injury than good. The malefactor should hear no sound to warn him of the coming danger, until justice is within her sword's reach of his head.

Nevertheless, while avoiding, for the present, any minor details that might embarrass a general argument, it is but justice to ourselves to state that we have already abundant materials to substantiate and justify the strongest language that indignant freemen could employ. By the corruption of our nominating conventions—by the aid of accomplices guarding every rill and sluice-gate of the election, and forcing the popular current through boxes possessed of a magical or transforming influence, so that "snow-flakes" entering white in open day, come out black after nightfall, when examined under candle-light by the Inspectors—by traitors in the ranks of every other party, employed to foment divisions and prevent the combination of an otherwise overwhelming and adverse majority—by the unlawful and secret concentration in one hand of all the municipal patronage, apparently divided between the different heads of departments, but really made over by its ostensible dispensers as the price of their nomination and appointment—by an ever vigilant and omnipresent system of espionage and coercion, interpenetrating the most minute details of our City organization, and as active in securing a partizan constable as in plotting for the seizure of the most splendid federal posts—by the cooperation and connivance of high officials occupying seats designed to be above the reach of any sordid or unworthy influence, and backed by a drilled and disciplined army of over one thousand strong, with captains, paymasters, lieutenants and sergeants—an army in which every private is again the captain of a squad of minor ruffians in his ward or district, whose pursuits are of a nature that allow their uniformed chief to make compensation for political allegiance by a convenient apathy that enables them to pursue their various callings undisturbed,—by these and means still blacker and more infamous, if that be possible, our political liberty has been suppressed, our municipal treasury depleted, and our City made the scoff of all mankind, as the worst governed and most expensive human chaos that ever made pretensions to enlightenment and freedom.

For turning a face of flint against the audacious sophistries which sought to justify and perpetuate this condition of our City under the plea of past political services and party need, our National Executive deserves and has received the thanks of every one not holding some portion of the municipal plunder; nor will the presumptuous—not to say audacious—letter, received by Mr. Buchanan from the party chiefly disappointed, be likely to influence a regret for the course that has won such general and hearty favor;—and let Mr. Schell look closely to it, that the power now tranced in simulated death, be not revived by a friendly agency, and that machinations for another onslaught are not concealed beneath the pomp of a fictitious funeral. The cat, and other animals of the tiger tribe, not unfrequently feign sleep or death to lure nearer the prey that is beyond their spring; the comatose condition of a dangerous man does not, of necessity, imply that he will be less dangerous on awaking; and even Mr. Croswell or Elijah F. Purdy would admit—if the case were put before either as an abstract proposition—that men in a suspected wood should never halloo, till they are safely out of it.

But the prominence of the Executive must not blind us to the good service rendered by Recorder Smith, in his last charge to the Grand Jury, and the tacit promise which that document contains of still further and unflinching resistance to the tide of municipal corruption. Entering on his official duties under the avowed and immediate auspices of the Power that must be curbed, if the City is to be saved, the Recorder, since the moment of his awaking to a true perception of the scheme in which he was expected and appointed to take part, has manifested the noblest firmness and integrity—devoting himself to the real duties of his office and the best interests of our City, at heavy personal sacrifices—contesting every illegal usurpation of authority where opposition could avail; and where it could not, withdrawing altogether from any semblance of participation in acts against which all his finer principles and sensibilities revolted. Let us not inquire too rigidly whether he performed his whole duty in the days gone by. We know and are convinced that he at all times acted up to the best conceptions of the right—while the Charge under review is a tacit confession that those earlier conceptions were erroneous. A man of generous and cultured mind does not easily forego the remembrance of a personal obligation, nor will he, for light cause, disrupt all his former associations, and throw the weight of his influence and position against those who were partly instrumental in raising him to office. We must strengthen the Recorder's hands; for he has evinced a noble determination to do his duty, and under present circumstances is the last barrier between the Grand Jury and the prolific source of all our municipal and political corruptions.

The Trinity Church Question.

We receive a great number of communications concerning the Trinity Church controversy which we must decline publishing. We have already devoted as much space to this subject as the claims of other topics will allow. Besides, we regard the bill now pending in the Assembly as foreordained to pass,—and we have no desire to waste words in arguing a foregone conclusion. But our opinions in regard to the measure are unchanged. We consider the enactment of the law in question to be not only a great wrong in itself, but one of most dangerous precedent,—one which, in course of time, no one will more bitterly repent than the parties who are made to assume the responsibility of it. It is no new thing for politicians to profess the most radical theories concerning the rights of property and the sacredness of vested interests:—but the most reckless of them all have stopped with professions hitherto, and, when clothed with the responsibility of power, have stood by the landmarks of settled principle and law. The present Legislature, and the majority which is responsible for its action, are apparently destined to the gloomy and dangerous distinction of creating a new precedent in this respect.

The controversy is purely one of law,—and its decision should have been left to the Courts of law. In regard to this point the "Compromise" bill of Senator Brooks is more objectionable than the original proposal, since it adds new legislation where there was possibly too much already. This will be clear enough from a simple statement of the point at issue.

The Original Charter of 1697 created the parish of Trinity Church, provided for a rector of that parish, and declared that its affairs should be managed by two Wardens and twenty Vestrymen, who were to be elected "by the majority of the votes of the inhabitants of the said parish in communion with the said Church." To the Corporation thus created the various grants now belonging to Trinity Church have been made; and subsequent enactments have from time to time regulated the details of the incorporation without affecting, in any respect, its essential character. In the course of time other Episcopal Churches, not chapels of Trinity nor connected with it in any way, grew up in the City and desired, naturally enough, to share the property and the power which had been conferred upon her. Gradually they began to claim the right of sharing it,—upon the plea that it had been conferred, not for the use of the parish of Trinity Church exclusively, but for the use of all the Episcopal churches in the City of New-York. And this was the origin,—and this is still the gist,—of the whole controversy.

Every one must see at a glance that it is purely and exclusively a question of law; and as such it should have been taken to the Courts of law for settlement. But, instead of proceeding thus, the Legislature in 1814 passed an act defining in effect the original charter, and restricting the enjoyment and control of this property to the "members or pew-holders of Trinity Church or any of the chapels belonging to the same, and forming part of the same religious corporation." And now, forty-three years after the date of that enactment, persons on behalf of the other Episcopal Churches in the City apply for the repeal of this law, in order that they may again urge their claim to a share in the property of Trinity under the original charter of 1697. Against such action very strong arguments have been and might again be justly urged. But it has a show of fairness and of justice in its behalf,—inasmuch as its effect would be simply to remedy the possible error of 1814, and throw back into the Courts of law a question which should never be taken from them.

But the substitute which has passed the Senate is infinitely worse in principle and in effect. It not only repeals the law of 1814 quoad hoc, but it then steps in and decides the case; or rather, instead of making any decision of the question of law, or providing for any such decision in any mode whatever, it makes an arbitrary division of the property between the contending parties,—and then calls itself a compromise! Trinity is to hold half, and the other half is to be shared among the rival claimants. This is in utter mockery alike of justice and of law. It not only violates the fundamental principle by which all property is held, but it scouts the idea that there is any such principle in existence. If John Smith or Patrick McGuire were to claim Mr. Aston's property, there might be some show of reason why the Legislature should pass a bill enabling him to test the question in Courts of law. But if that body were to assert, as a compromise, that half the property in controversy should be summarily handed over to the claimants, its action would probably be condemned by public sentiment as outrageous, and set aside by the Courts as unconstitutional. We apprehend a similar fate for the present bill.

Our Courts of law as yet enjoy the confidence of the public. Corporations and individuals are willing to intrust them with the decision of their rights. But we presume that any one of the respectable gentlemen who are urging the present bill through the Legislature would hesitate to submit to the Honorable Andy Sheridan and his honorable associates, the naked question, whether the control and enjoyment of his property should or should not be shared by the great body of the constituents of these honorable gentlemen.

Austria and Piedmont.

By the last mail from Europe, we were advised that a diplomatic rupture had taken place between Austria and Sardinia. We are only surprised that the event has been delayed so long. The two States, for years, have been animated by the most hostile feelings towards each other. Their relations have been marked by incessant bickerings and jealousies, embittered by the circumstance that the two governments were and are essentially antagonistic; for, while the one is the incarnation of a religious and military despotism, the other is based on the principles of constitutional liberty. Upon Italian soil, Austria is regarded as a Usurper and Despoiler—Sardinia as the champion of the people's liberties. What wonder, then, that they should be disposed to quarrel!

The immediate cause of the present diplomatic rupture is a dispatch from Count Buol, wherein the freedom with which the Sardinian press discusses Austrian affairs is severely censured. Count Cavour replies sharply and effectively, and defends the freedom of the press with dignity and ability. Austria, thereupon, holds the Sardinian Government responsible for the attacks of Sardinian journals, and, imagining that an insult has been offered to his person, Francis Joseph withdraws his minister.

There can be no question but that the people of Sardinia will unite on almost any question that involves hostility to Austria. We have seen that in the Legislative Chambers, five millions of francs were promptly voted to place the fortifications of Alessandria in thorough repair. This is a move calculated to rouse the whole of Italy to action. Alessandria is the symbol of a resistance that has been made for centuries to the invasions of the German Emperors. Its history is not merely Piedmontese—it is Italian. Six centuries ago the city was founded as a refuge for the victims of German fury. It became celebrated at the time that the "Lombard League" was formed for the protection of Italy against Frederick I. Alessandria is situated near the confluence of the rivers Tanaro and Po. It defends the plains of Piedmont, and is regarded as one of the most extensive fortifications in Europe. It was partly ruined even before the Napoleonic wars, and its restoration was always considered as a too heavy burden for the Sardinian budget. The patriotism of the people, however, will soon discover a method for replenishing the Exchequer, and Alessandria, ere long, will present a formidable front to an Austrian enemy, if one should ever appear before its walls.

The pluck of Sardinia, in the defiant attitude she has assumed, is to be particularly noticed at this juncture, because she has no reason to expect any decided support from her Western Allies. Louis Napoleon is a doubtful friend, especially in a matter where the liberty of the press is the point at issue. Lord Palmerston is not much better, and, of late, he has proved himself but a treacherous supporter of Italian liberty. The great Anglo-French demonstration against Naples has ended in smoke, and by the next steamer we may expect to hear that King Bomba is once more on friendly terms with France and England. It is strange, but nevertheless true, that Russia is the only European power which takes the part of Sardinia in the present emergency. It is not to be supposed, however, that the Emperor Alexander is moved by any sudden wish to encourage the propagation of liberal principles. A bitter hostility to Austria for her conduct during the war is rather the motive that disposes Russia to sympathize with a liberal rather than a despotic Power.

There are, at present, no indications that the dispute between Austria and Sardinia will extend beyond a diplomatic rupture. If it should, though the latter is by far the weaker of the two, it is impossible to say how formidable she might become if placed at the head of the Italian States, and with the Italian people united under the watchword of "Italy for the Italians."

A Case of Distress.

The Editor and Proprietor of the Herald is waging a savage and ferocious war upon the new Secretary of the Navy, because he declines to attach the two vessels, which are going out to lay down the Transatlantic Telegraph, to the Herald Establishment! The decrepitude and decay which have overtaken the concern have seriously impaired its ordinary enterprise, and the only way in which it can get news now-a-days is by bullying office-holders into lending it a helping hand. Secretary Cass, having a fellow-feeling for such a venerable piece of decayed mortality as the Herald has become, retails his private conversations with Lord Napier,—discloses the contents of his secret foreign dispatches,—and prepares a compte rendu every night of his private meditations on affairs in general,—for the benefit of the Herald—that is, if any reliance is to be placed upon the assertions and representations of the venerable "historian" of Parker Vein. Secretary TOUCEY, however, seems to be made of different stuff. He thinks it quite as much as he can do, to attend to the affairs of the Navy Department, without undertaking the herculean task of supplying the Herald with all the intelligence, brains and enterprise it notoriously lacks. So he very respectfully declines to furnish accommodations on the vessels of the fleet for the Herald's reporters,—whereupon the indignant "historian" of Parker Vein chews him like a pickpocket. Whether Mr. Secretary TOUCEY's constitution can withstand so formidable a battery of billingsgate as the Pistol organ has opened upon him remains to be seen.

The Herald must be in his dotage to suppose that so absurd a request as he made to Secretary TOUCEY could possibly be granted. If reporters for one peper are to be furnished with hammocks, rooms, rations, &c., &c. on board our vessels of war, those of all the other papers must have similar accommodations,—and this is a simple impossibility. Our vessels of war are not adapted to any such service—they have no room for such accommodations. The statement that the British Government acted differently during the Crimean war, is a pure mistake. No reporters were accommodated on board the fleet, either in the Baltic or the Black Sea, and special orders were issued that the correspondents of the Times and other London journals should not be furnished with rations. The English Press went upon its own book, in its admirable arrangements for supplying the world with news of the Crimean war. Our Government has always acted on the same principle—and when BAYARD TAYLOR went to Japan, the only way in which he could obtain passage by the Government vessels, was by regularly entering the service.

We shall give our readers full and prompt reports of everything that may occur during the interesting cruise of the Niagara and Mississippi,—and we shall do it without calling upon the Government for help, or abusing the Secretary of the Navy for not joining the corps of TIMES reporters.

IRISH EMIGRATION.—T. D. MCGEE, Esq., has written a full and able vindication of the projects for Irish Emigration to the West, which were advocated by Father TRACEY in his recent lecture at the Tabernacle, and denounced in so startling and extraordinary a manner by Archbishop HUGHES. Mr. MCGEE says that, as he did not consider it proper to enter upon any controversy with his ecclesiastical superior, he should have said nothing upon the subject except in reply to the echoes of the Archbishop's opinions in the Irish News and Irish American. He handles the editors of these journals with a good deal more severity than ceremony, and sustains the Emigration scheme itself with vigorous and cogent arguments. He finds an absolute necessity for some such movement of relief in the coadition of the Irish in our large cities, and in the fact that so long as they remain there neither they nor their children have any prospect of improving their condition.

A HINT.—The Washington Star intimates to the "historian" of Parker Vein, the "Editor and Proprietor" of the Herald, that "he is throwing away labor in burnishing up the buttons of that old diplomatic coat of his—for if the Herald does nought for the next year but puff, puff, puff the Administration, he will be no nearer at the end of it than when 'poor PIERCE' was in the White House, to the realization of the embassy to France." This is a poor way of encouraging one's friends.

Personal.

The Boston Journal contradicts its statement that Rev. Mr. KALLOCH intended to leave the ministry. That gentleman will not only resume his pastoral duties, but will insist upon a new trial, feeling confident that the result will be as acquittal. Mr KALLOCH is still under bonds of $2,000 to await the decision of the Government in regard to a new trial It is not customary, in a case occupying so much time, and with a majority of the Jury in favor of acquittal, to proceed to a second trial except upon the discovery of additional evidence. The District-Attorney has the power, however, to nol. pros. the indictment, or with the consent of the Court, to have it placed on file for future action.

Mr. JAMES K. POLK has presented to the Tennessee Historical Society a set of curiosities which have been in her possession for some time. Among them are a blue pitcher, used in the Indian Council at Hopewell in 1785, originally the property of OCONOSTOTA, the King of the Cherokees; an Indian pipe presented to President POLK by the head chief of the Winnebagoes, and a piece of oak from the old frigate Constitution.

HON. DAVID WILMOT, Union candidate for Governor in Pennsylvania, has addressed a note to Gen. PACKER, the Democratic candidate, requesting him to name a convenient place to begin the canvass of the State. Should Mr. PACKER decline, it is the intention of Judge WILMOT to commence the canvass alone some time in May.

At a meeting of the Massachusetts Historical Society, on Thursday evening, Hon. EDWARD EVERETT presented a rare English manuscript, which he had received from THOMAS CARLYLE, containing memorandums relating to the Franklin family in England, previous to their removal to America.

Rev. Mr. FOSTER, the popular Chaplain of the Massachusetts House of Representatives, has resigned this office, to take effect the 1st of May, at which time he leaves for Kansas.

Obituary.

The late Prof. TUOMEY of Alabama, who died March 30, was an active member of the American Association for the Advancement of Science. He made a geological survey of South Carolina some years ago, and was subsequently appointed State Geologist of Alabama. At the time of his death, he occupied the chair of Geology and Agricultural Chemistry in the University of Alabama. Prof. TUOMEY had been engaged with Prof. HOLMES in the publication of a work on the Fossils of South Carolina.

The Masonic Concert.

The Grand Concert by OLE BULL, the Mendelssohn Union, &c. &c., for the benefit of the Masonic Board of Relief, will take place at Niblo's this evening. The arrangements for the Concert we are told are complete, and the programme presented gives promise of one of the richest musical treats we have had this season. We hope to see a crowded house.

Staten Island Lighted with Gas.

The works at Townsend's Landing are now completed and 11 miles of pipe laid. The dwellings in Clifton, Stapleton, Tompkinsville, New-Brighton, Factoryville, Elliotville and Port Richmond, were illuminated for the first time on Thursday evening.

Fire in William-street.

About 2½ o'clock yesterday afternoon a fire broke out in the four-story building No. 71 William-street, and, before extinguished, did about $3,000 damage to the stock and building. It originated on the second floor, (apparently in an ash or robbish-box,) near the fireplace, and close against the wall. The flames shot quickly upwards to the third floor, but were quenched before they had made further headway. The whole building, from top to bottom, was flooded with water. The second floor is occupied by A. JACOBSON, dealer in sashnets, cloths, &c., and by M. OPPER, dealer in fancy goods. The greatest damage was done on the third floor, which, with the fourth floor, is in the occupancy of HOPE, TOWNSEND & LIVINGSTON, wholesale clothiers.

The stock of Messrs. SIMONS & HERMAN, on the occupants of the first floor, was damaged to an extent estimated at $2,000. They are fully insured in the Mechanics' and Traders', Brooklyn, and other Companies. All the other firms are also insured.

Marine Disaster.

Wrecking on the Long Island Coast.

The business of saving a valuable cargo from a stranded ship upon the Long Island or New Jersey shore, involves greater hardships and exposures than, perhaps, fall to the lot of any other department of ocean service. The work is uniformly intrusted to men of tried experience and ability, who are generally in the permanent employment of the Board of Underwriters, who pay them liberal salaries for their services. They are provided with every facility, such as steamboats, steam-pumps and lighters, while there is any chance for getting the vessel off, and when that is found impracticable, a corps of twenty or thirty hardy riggers and seamen are placed under their command, to strip the vessel, and rescue as much as possible of the cargo from destruction. A brief sketch of the operations in the case of the ship Irene, ashore at Moriches, Long Island, will exhibit a fair illustration of this kind of service in mid Winter.

Intelligence reached the Underwriters on the 24th of January last, that the ship Irene, with a valuable assorted cargo, from Liverpool, had stranded on the shore opposite Moriches the day previous. The same day Capt ISRAEL J. MERRITT, the agent of the Underwriters, was dispatched to the wreck to ascertain and report her situation. Long Island, at this time, was heavily covered with snow, drifted in some places to the depth of several feet, blocking up all the roads and covering the fences. A journey over sixty miles, in mid-Winter, on Long Island, is no joke for either rider or driver; but floundering through dense snow drifts, sometimes on horseback, sometimes in rickety sleighs, or on foot, adds nothing to one's comfort, with the thermometer at zero. Twenty dollars was not a high charge for a short ride, and sixty dollars was paid by Capt. MERRITT before reaching Moriches. Arrived here, a bay three miles wide intervened between the main and the outer beach, which must be crossed upon the ice, now covered deeply with snow and abounding in treacherous air-holes, concealed beneath the drifts. The ship, already deserted by her officers and crew, lay half full of water, two hundred yards from the shore, her rigging and hull encased in the frozen spray, and the beach for miles was filled, eight and ten feet perpendicular, with ice to the edge of the surf.

When the wind is on shore, and blowing but a moderate breeze, there is always too much swell on this beach to make it possible to go off and on with safety in a boat, and a hawser has to be stretched from the bowsprit, or masthead, when the wreck is near enough for that purpose, on which to pass to and from the ship, which is now generally done in the life car. During mild weather, the ship furnishes sufficient shelter for the men, but as soon as a gale of wind comes on, the sea breaks, often, completely over her, making it impossible to remain on board; and, as she is liable to go to pieces in one night, exposed to the fury of such a gale, it is unsafe to trust oneself on board over night. Captain BOWNE, another agent of the Board of Underwriters, soon arrived with lighters, men and steam-pumps, and continued for five days making ineffectual efforts to get the ship afloat. The attempt was finally abandoned, and the work of discharging the cargo into lighters was begun, and has been continued up to Thursday night last, 21st, when, during a heavy southeast gale, the ship went to pieces, and in the morning not a vestige of her was to be seen.

During these three months, six and seven hours per day was the average time which it was possible to work on board the ship, and that for only about two days out of a week. Notwithstanding, Capt. MERRITT and his crew of thirteen man were daily in the habit of crossing the bay from their boarding house, three miles distant, upon the ice, and returning again at night—sometimes going on foot after the ice began to melt, and the water covering it half-leg deep. When the ice became too rotten to render it no longer safe, a boat was taken with them, and hauled behind or pushed before, into which they could escape as the ice gave way beneath them. Notwithstanding this precaution, Capt. M. and his party frequently broke through, and narrowly escaped drowning.

When the ship broke up there were about 600 tons of iron, 160 cases of steel, 3,200 boxes of tin, 300 tons of coal, and about 160 cases of dry goods remaining on board; most of this now lies in the bottom of the ship, the dry goods probably having been mostly broken up. The work of recovering this property will be given to a contractor, at the lowest bid; the rates paid varying from 50 to 75 per cent. of the value of the property recovered, according to circumstances. The party who undertakes the contract will probably have a summer's job before them, and with the ordinary chances of the weather, will earn all they succeed in fishing out of the surf.

AN UNFORTUNATE BARK.

The bark Fortune, Capt. HILTON, from Bordeaux, arrived at this port Wednesday, after a boisterous passage of 84 days; having sailed on the 16th of January. Nine days out, the F. fell in with the English brig Donna, of Newcastle, during a heavy gale from the N. W. The D. had a signal of distress flying, having lost her Captain and two men overboard; the F. could render no assistance on account of the gale, but humanely lay by the vessel for 48 hours, after which the Donna bore away for Lisbon. Captain HILTON reports having seen some half dozen different waterlogged and abandoned vessels, and came near being placed in that category himself, having lost many of his spars and sails, and suffered other mishaps. Had nothing but heavy westerly gales the entire passage. On the 5th of April he was off Barnegat, in thick weather, after being fifty days west of the Banks, and driven four times across the gulf stream. The report that he was spoken on the 20th of March was a mistake, as he was at that time more than 1,000 miles from this port.

Letters to ELWOOD WALTER, dated Liverpool, March 25, state that the ship Melbourne was got afloat from the Strand at Southport the night previous; and the Hero on the morning of that day, was got off from Formöy; the Hero had been docked in safety, and the Melbourne was at anchor in the river, and was much injured. The ship Sea had not yet been got off, but her cargo was being discharged.

The steamer Vixen, with a large party of Naval officers and others, was in attendance to accompany the frigate on her way to sea, when it was discovered that they were to be disappointed in that pleasure; they steamed down to the Hook and out over the Bar, returning to the Navy Yard about 6 o'clock P.M.

Railroad Accommodations.

The Third-avenue Railroad Company is building a handsome and spacious depôt between Fifty-fifth and Fifty-sixth streets, on the east side of the avenue. The rear building is already erected. The shops which occupy its eastern front are separated by a fire-proof wall from the stables and feed-stores. In the basement of this building are the stables, 750 in number, in sets of 14—the number of horses which every driver has to look after. For, though each driver has but six working teams, each has a "seventh-day team" always at hand. Every horse of the establishment has his seventh day for rest,—and hence the supply of what they call "Seventh-Day Horses." The stalls are floored with plank, laid in cement, and slanted so that all water runs directly into a drain between each two sets of stalls, and the Croton washes it into the street drain. On the first-story floor the cars turn to change their direction, and there they are to be housed each night. The upper stories are for storing feed, for conductors' and drivers' rooms, offices, &c. In front of this building is to be erected a large edifice, with a brown-stone front, we believe, for offices, the accommodation of passengers, and all that. It will have halls suitable for public gatherings, which, until the Company needs the room, will be open to the public. In the part erected a wholesome and quite uncommon regard has been paid to ventilation and facilities for keeping the premises clean. The streets on each side (Fifty-fifth and Fifty-sixth streets) are being rapidly opened by the Company in connection with the owners of the property lying east, to the river.

The New-York Dispensary.

NEW-YORK DISPENSARY,
Corner White and Centre streets,
WEDNESDAY, April 8, 1857.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

SIR: In the name of all the Dispensaries of the civilized world, I thank you, for your benevolent effort to rescue these old-fashioned, unobtrusive and much-neglected dispensers of good from the oblivion which has threatened them, as evinced in the enlightened article in your issue of the 6th inst., under the title of "The Police of Pestilence."

As the article in question seems to have been prompted by a perusal of the report of this Institution, I beg leave to offer a word in its particular behalf. During the forty years, for which period the New-York Dispensary was the only institution of the kind in the City, the residences of nearly all the wealthy inhabitants were within the district benefitted by its labors; these have been gradually superseded by stores, and the movement up town has lately become so general, that your appeal to all benevolent citizens to "assist the Dispensary of their particular District," if literally responded to, would leave us, in great measure, to the tender mercies of the millionaires of the Five Points and the wharves. By making a suggestion to this effect, you will greatly oblige Yours, very respectfully,

D. COLDEN MURRAY, Treasurer,
No. 62 South street.

State Arsenals—Proposed Sale of the Arsenal Property at Sixty-third-street.

A bill "To authorise the sale of the State Arsenals in New-York and Albany, to provide for the purchase of the New-York Arsenal property in New-York, by the City of New-York, and for the appropriation of the proceeds of such sales," has already passed the Assembly and is pending in the Senate. It provides for the sale at auction of the State Arsenal and grounds, on the west side of Fifth-avenue between Sixty-third and Sixty-fifth-streets, and limits the price to $270,000: the Commissioners of the Land Office to conduct the sale. The Mayor and Common Council, or the Commissioners of the Central Park, may purchase the same, if they so elect, at any time, not less, however, than ten days before the designated day of sale, at a price agreed on between them and the Land Commissioners; and to make such purchase, the City is authorized to issue bonds for the amount. Out of the proceeds of this sale various sums are appropriated for the erection or repairs of arsenals and armories in different parts of the State, viz.:

For the purchase of the United States Arsenal at Rome, and the improvement of the same, so as to render it suitable for the purposes of a State Arsenal, the sum of $17,000.

For the erection and completion of an arsenal in the city of Brooklyn, and for the purchase of the land therefor, $40,000.

For the improvement of the State arsenal at Albany, so as to render the same fit for the purposes of a State arsenal, the sum of $25,000.

For the erection and completion of a new State arsenal, and the purchase of the land thereof, in the city of Buffalo, the sum of $45,000.

For the erection and completion of an arsenal in the City of New-York, and the purchase of the land therefor, the sum of $100,000.

For the erection and completion of a new State arsenal in the village of Corning, $14,000.

For the erection and completion of an armory in the city of Rochester, $5,000.

For the erection and completion of an armory in the city of Utica, $3,000.

For the erection and completion of an armory in the city of Syracuse, $3,000.

For the erection and completion of an armory in the city of Troy, $5,000.

For the erection and completion of an armory in the city of Auburn, $3,000.

For the erection and completion of an armory in the city of Oswego, $3,000.

For the erection and completion of an armory in the village of Ballston Spa, $3,000.

For the purchase of a stone fort at Schoharie, $3,000.

A bill substantially like this, except that the minimum sale price fixed was $250,000, was introduced in the Legislature last year, but was not acted upon. The Commissary-General, J. H. HOBART WARD, has again pressed the subject on the attention of the Legislature, during the current session, and with good prospects of success. The proposed sale of the present Arsenal property at Sixty-third-street, seems to meet with favor from those most interested in military affairs.

The Seventh Regiment.

The citizens of Pokeepsie have tendered an invitation to the Seventh Regiment National Guards, to select that place for their encampment the coming Summer. The Common Council have appointed a Committee to confer with a Committee of citizens in making the preliminary arrangements.

Incipient Repentance.

From Boston Post. (New-York Correspondence,) of Friday.

The DAILY TIMES continues to flagellate the Herald without mercy. Who will say after this that when people get old and hardened in sin chastisement does them no good? The case of BENNETT will stand forth to posterity as a memorable proof of the fallaciousness of such a theory; for he gives evidence of a disposition to mend his ways just in proportion as he is scourged and lacerated by Mr. RAYMOND. For my own part I have no pleasure in seeing poor BENNETT writhe in this manner; yet when I see that it does him so much good I think the operation should be continued until there is an entire reformation. Judging from the effects of recent castigations there is reason to hope that if he got about two whippings a week, regularly, until Christmas next—such as no one can administer more tellingly than RAYMOND—since no one understands his case so well—he would be able to begin the new year an altered man.

NEWS GOT UP TO BE READ BUT NOT TO BE BELIEVED.—The Herald's authority for its reports of private conversation must be spirits. How else can it tell what General CASS and Lord NAPIER say when closeted alone? It tells us their conversation with as much precision as if it was taken down in short hand, and then the next day informs that CASS and NAPIER are terribly chagrined and mortified at the publication of their private conversation! Every sensible reader knows, of course, that all this stuff is made up in the Herald office; but then there are thousands who never stop to think and ask themselves how the Herald reporter can know what Mr. CASS thinks, or what Lord NAPIER thinks, or how he can hear private conversation that takes place in Mr. CASS' office. The Herald frequently publishes the discussions in Cabinet meetings, and a large portion of its superficial readers, no doubt, believe them without ever for once thinking that if they were true, the Herald could by no possible means know anything about them.

When the Herald was first issued, some time in 1853, it published what it pretended took place between two persons in a private room, and of a nature that the parties themselves would be the last in the world to disclose. One of BENNETT's friends, who occupied the same office with him, and who supposed that he was endeavoring to build up a respectable and reliable newspaper, called his attention to the article at once, and said:

"BENNETT, how came you to let such a thing as that get into your paper?"

"That—Why, what is the matter o' that?" asked BENNETT.

"Matter?" said the friend, "why, it is not true, it can't be true, and if it were, you could not know it: anybody can see that it is a lie; no one will believe it."

"I don't care a dom whether it is true or not," was the old Scotchman's reply, "I print a paper to be read, not to be believed."

The friend was a man of the "olden time," and accustomed to believe what he read. He was so "shocked at BENNETT's shameless dishonesty," as he termed it, that he would never after have anything to do with him. If the readers of the Herald will, when reading its Washington news, bear in mind BENNETT's declaration that he "prints a paper to read and not to be believed," they will be enabled to account for a great deal of its mysterious and singular reports of private conversations that never took place.—Day Book.

From the Boston Daily Advertiser.

BOSTON, Monday, April 6, 1857.

James M. Beebe, Esq., President of the Board of Trade, Boston:

DEAR SIR: Your committee report the result of their interviews with the Government regarding Chinese affairs. The Secretary of State furnished all necessary information to them, and so far as can be judged from the various conferences with the State Department and others, it is evident that our Government will not engage in active coöperation with the warlike demonstration of the European governments against China, but they seem ready to coöperate in any moral and peaceable measures to amend the treaties with China, and to terminate the existing hostilities.

The Government has determined to send out a new Commissioner or Minister, and to increase our naval force on the coast of China, and appears to be fully alive to the necessity of sending as Commissioner a man fully competent in all respects to meet the difficulties which may arise out of the delicate relations which must exist between the European powers and ourselves, as well as with the Chinese, so long as the hostile demonstrations may be continued, in order that we may exercise the influence which we ought to have in the matter without being involved in the war.

We are, with great respect,
Your obedient servants,
(Signed) WM. APPLETON,
R. B. FORBES.

REMARKABLE COLD WEATHER—ALMOST TOTAL DESTRUCTION OF FRUIT.—The rain, sleet, hail and snow, of Sunday, was followed that night by excessively cold weather for the season, the thermometer in Pewee Valley, and other points in the country, having, at 6 o'clock yesterday morning, fallen to only 18° above zero—a degree of cold frequently not reached during entire Winters in this latitude. Experienced fruit-growers, with whom we have conversed, express the opinion that all the peaches, pears, cherries, apricots, nectarines, and the early apples have been killed. The cold seems to have been general, and there is no doubt of as almost entire loss of the fruit crop in Kentucky, Indiana and Ohio.—Louisville Courier.

WARNING TO "FAST" YOUNG MEN.—JOHN MILLER, aged twenty-eight years, died at Indianapolis on last Friday night. The Journal gives a brief history of his sad case. He was born in Dayton, Ohio—was left an orphan with a large estate, and to his own guidance—became a "fast young man," and rapidly spent a fortune which was counted by tens of thousands. He kept a circle of dashing young fellows about him until his money was gone, who then deserted and left him. He sought Indianapolis for a home, and there, in some menial capacity, lived for a time, and died in a strange garret, friendless, and alone.

BUSINESS NOTICES.

A CARD.—AT A MEETING OF THE EMPLOYES of the Hat Manufactory of J. H. PRENTICE & CO., convened at the Lecture-room of the Manufactory, Brooklyn, on Wednesday evening, April 9, W. W. TUFTS was chosen Chairman, and B. W. PALMER, Secretary. The Chairman having stated the objects of the meeting, the following resolutions were read and adopted:

Whereas, Our employers, J. H. PRENTICE & CO., have, at their own expense, generously and spontaneously provided a course of scientific lectures, with a view solely to our amusement and instruction, and have also provided a large and valuable Library, together with several large and well-lighted Reading-rooms, which they have bountifully supplied with the newspapers issued in various parts of the country; and

Whereas, The general and free diffusion of useful knowledge is eminently calculated to elevate, refine, and strengthen the individual, as well as the nation, to foster a love for republican institutions, and to dissipate the errors of superstition; and

Whereas, These lectures have been delivered by a gentleman whose scientific attainments have given him a wide-spread reputation, and have been elaborately and clearly illustrated by beautiful and interesting experiments, introduced with the aid of the lecturer's skillful assistant; therefore

Resolved, That this series of lectures has been to us a source of much gratification and instruction, and has placed those who have been permitted to attend them under many obligations to the firm of J. H. PRENTICE & Co., who have lent both their presence and their energies to render them successful.

Resolved, That we appreciate the learning, skill, and perspicuity which have been displayed by Prof. R. OGDEN DOREMUS, while performing the difficult task of delivering a course of scientific lectures before a miscellaneous audience.

Resolved, That we appreciate the valuable services of the lecturer's assistant, Dr. BUDD.

Resolved, That to Mr. HENRY MOLTEN, one of the firm, are we indebted for the introduction of music after the lectures, and the arrangement and successful prosecution of a musical soirée, during the past Winter. Also are we under many obligations to Mr. D. D. GASWOLD, who has lent an additional charm to the evenings' entertainments, by his beautiful and happily-executed songs.

Improvements Up Town—Jones' Woods Dissolving into City Lots.

Sunshine is getting into Jones' Woods. When this fine old forest, which had been talked of for a great park for the City, was supplanted by the Central Park, people supposed the nabobs that enjoyed its cool, sequestered shades, would with doubled diligence fight off all improvements, and probably with success, until they found the avenues and streets hutting them hard, lager bier setting up tents on all their outskirts, their orchards and gardens tempting vagrants to break the Sunday and anti-stealing commandments, and the seclusion and darkness seducing outsiders to violate on their premises all the rest of the commandments, save and except only the one which charges us not to covet—such thief-hannted premises. But the Spirit of Improvement had medinms in the woods, and their perpetual rappings and tippings have thoroughly frightened the proprietors. So quietly that not one in a thousand of those who ride through daily on the Second-avenue Railroad ever dreamed what they were at, they have joined their forces to open streets and avenues, and make the woods marketable. During the past year, thousands of fine old trees have been cut down, and the sunlight shone all yesterday morning upon mould that never emelt nor felt sunlight before for a hundred years. Goths that the owners have hired by the day cut down magnificent elms, oaks that stretched singly over many rods, tulip trees and horse-chestnuts larger hy half than most of us believe thom capable of growing, cedars that the British soldiery in the time of the Revolution spared for their beauty, pear and cherry trees that the mothers of these owners themselves planted. The operation has produced a good deal of bvine in aristocratic eyes, hut manifest destiny was too much for them.

Jones' Woods extends from Third-avenue to the East River, and from Sixty-sixth to Seventy-fifth-street. The Second-avenue was some years since graded through its western end, but that is the only public road that bss yet traversed it. Yorkville has crept down from the north to its very edge, and the city has so truly marched up to its lower border that they ask $500 rent for the available residences oven within gunshot of it.

Street Commissioner TAYLOR's men have surrounded and taken the whole hy storm. He has contracted out on short sections First-avenue both above and below the woods, and says it s all be completed this Summer. The gangs in the woods have already cut down all the timber on the line of the avenue to meet the Commissioner's men.

Avenue A is also under contract by the Commissioner up and down to the woods line. Within the woods, fewer forest trees must be sacrificed to its opening, than to that of First avenue, hut it makes melancholy hawoc with the shrubbery and garden of the JONES'. Right in its line stood a square of four noble English cherry trees, in whose branches was a Summer arlor; all have been leveled. Avenue B is already open to steamboats, and ships of the line from the South, until it strikes Seventy-first street. Above that it will be open to the Harbor Commissioners' bulkhead, and no piers, we suppose, till past Seventy-fourth-street.

Some of the cross-streets are also opening. The Third-avenue Railroad have joined the owners, to open Sixty-fifth and Sixty-sixth streets. Sixty ninth-street, we believe, is not yet touched. Whenever it does start, as they say it shall next Summer, it will cut through the mansion of the JONES'—last occupied by Judge PENDLETON, further back the home of old "Ready Money Provoost" and the ancient Captain RYNDERS. Under the bank of the river is still left a roomy cellar, in good preservation, where, tradition says, the Captain kept safe such foreign goods as had not happened to pass in the usual way into the Custom-House—and here, tradition says, he hid his gold. Certainly, here party after party has searched at dead of night to find the hidden gold—but if they have ever found it they have found wisdom too, and kept their mouths shut. Seventy first and Seventy-fourth streets are so far opened that they will be fit for travel from Third-avenue to the river by the middle of June. Seventy-first-street is for the most part on grade, bnt just east of Second-avenue it hores into a tremendous hill of rock. Half a dozen pairs of Patricks are all day smiting tremendous blows with sledge-hammers upon the drills that Michael, nodding, and forgetful of the peril his fists are in, holds and turns. Snch elaborate grunts as the strikers accompanied each blow with we never heard before. Add the echoes that the cuts returned, and you would think the drills were punching imprisoned spirits. When the drill is sunk some eight feet, they then substitnte the "runner," a long steel bar, and work it by hand down about fourteen feet from the surface. From one to two and a half kegs of powder lift out the original rocks to pasture.

Seventy-first-street, just before it strikes the river, undermines a tomb whose entrance passengers up and down the East River look up to with wonder. The tomb is built into the front of a high hill. A thick, broad and beautiful slab of Italian marble surmounte lt, on which is the following inscription:

JOHANNES RYNDERS,
Who was the most Loving Wife
Of DAVID PROVOOST.
It was her will
To be entrced in this hill.
OBITUS 8 XBER, 1749,
Aged 43 years.

Sacred to the memory of
DAVID PROVOOST, who died
Oct. 19, 1781, aged 90 years.

On the edge of the stone is chiseled:

"LOUVRE, Ano. 1758."

This inscription has given name to the farm which, for one hundred years, has been known as "the Louvre Farm." Within the last eighteen months some five times the mouth of the tomh has been sealed up with brick and mortar, hut as often it has been broken into at night by parties looking for Capt. RYNDERS' gold. Several small coffins are within; they have been rifled again and again. Two thigh bones lay, yesterday, just within the entrance, probably, those of the rich man who once walked along this beautiful height, its proprietor.

Heaven help rich folks! When the poor die, and are tucked into Potter's-field, their bones are indistinguishable from others', and they who go up on Sundays to play foot ball with the skulls that the Common Council allow to be unshielded from insult even by a board fence, cannot call them hy name as they kick them. But when rich men die, and are buried in splendid tombs, their names are written over them so that the vagabonds identify their fleshless skulls, and gibe at and mock them hy name. Rich people should pray for an army of children to keep their memories and their graves green.

The Auction Sale of Dr. Burdell's Furniture.

Some of the spirited bids at the auction sale of Dr. BUEDELL's furniture provo to have been hogus. There still remains in the house nearly $200 worth of the furniture that was sold, uncalled for. A man that remaining, le the front parlor carpet, where the fortunate witnesses to the Grand Inquest wiped their muddy feet, and the carpet on the second floor. The blood-stained carpet of the room where the mysterious murder was committed—the purchase, doubtless, of some morbid curiosity-monger—was among the first articles removed after the sale. In order to dispose of the uncalled-for effects, a second auction will be held early next month. At this sale the terms will be cash down.

Arrest of a Young Woman for Attempting to Pass a Counterfeit Bill—She Attempts Suicide.

MARY DUNN, a servant girl, aged 18 years, was arrested yesterday for offering a counterfeit $20 bill on the Citizens' Bank of Rhode Island, in payment for some articles purchased at the jewelry store of CHAS. SCHUMAKER, No. 56 Eighth-avenue. She was taken to the Ninth Ward Station-house and locked in a cell. Soon afterwards she attempted suicide by strnggling herself with a handkerchief. Her design was discovered in time to frustrate it. She was taken before Justice DAVIDSON, who detained Her for an examination.

Mr. Pease Leaving the Five Points.

Rev. L. M. PEASE has been compelled, on account of protracted ill health, to resign his office of Superintendent of the Five Points House of Industry; his official connection ceased on the first of the present month. Mr. J. M. PALMER, late principal of the Colored Associated Reformed School at Westfield, succeeds Mr. PEASE in the management of the institution.

It is not the intention of Mr. PEASE, however, to retire altogether from the field of his labors. His health, requiring a partial relaxation of duty, he will engage in the charge of the Five Points House of Industry, at Yonkville, where [illegible] will be [illegible] for the reception of as many as possible of the larger boys from the City institution, to be educated and worked up into practical farmers and gardeners. The farm includes about 100 acres of land, and has on it a farm-house recently built at an expense of $3,000. To carry out Mr. PEASE's plan an additional building will be needed. Mr. PEASE has been the Superintendent of the House of Industry for nearly seven years.

Accident to the Engine of the Niagara.

Yesterday being the day fixed for the departure of the Niagara, steam was got up early, and at 6 o'clock the engine was started, with a low head of steam, to take in the slack of the chains. The engine had made but two or three revolutions when the engineer discovered the steam escaping from behind the centre cylinder. Snpposing it to come from some obstruction of the aperture from which the condensed water is discharged from the cylinder, the steam was shnt off, and that part was examined; hut on letting on steam a second time, another and worse escape of the steam occurred, filling the engine room, so that nothing could be seen. A careful inspection was then made with a light, when the head of the outboard cylinder of the cenlre engine was observed to be broken entirely across, apparently hy the shrinkage of the iron. Had this accident happened at sea, nothing further would have been required hut to disconnect this disabled engine, and go ahead with the other two; but, as the anchor had not yet been weighed, it was deemed best to repair before proceeding upon the trial trip. Another cylinder head is already being cast and fitted, and also a spare one for use in case of a repetition of this disaster. Mr. EVERETT, the engineer-in chief, assures us, however, that the ship will, no doubt, be ready for sea in the course of a week. The frigate has dropped down about half a mile below first anchorage.

Salaries of Prison Employes Raised.

By a recent act of the Legislature, the wages o the officers of the several prisons in this State have been advanced about thirty-three and a third per cent. Thus the pay of the guards has been increased from $30 a month to $40, and the keepers of the workships will hereafter receive $600 per annum. The salary of the Clerk at Sing Sing Prison is to be $1,000, and that of the Clerks at Auburn and Clinton Prisons, $900 each. The physiciane of Auburn and Clinton Prisons will receive $600 per annum, and the physician at Sing Sing $700 a year. The pay of the chaplains at the three prisons will hereafter be $300 per annum. The salaries of the employes of the State's penal institutions have not before been materially changed for a number of years back.

Enlargement of the Battery—Mr. Busteed's Opinion.

The opinion of the Corporation Counsel, that the contract for the enlargement of the Battery, according to the ruling of the Supreme Court, was illegally made, the Aldermen delaying to concur in the resolution of the Board of Assistants until the year following that in which the resolution was passed, will have the effect of drawing public attention to the present condition of the Battery, and the progress of the "filling in." It is now several years since the action of the Common Council was taken, even with the defect which Mr. BUSTEED points out, and the work has advanced with the most leisurely tortoise pace, and scarcely promises, like the tortoise of the fable, eventually to reach the desired end. Yet money has been appropriated, by successive Boards of the Common Council, for the purpose of its prosecution—the term of the original contract has long since expired, and still it is not more than two-thirds completed, while operations upon it have been suspended altogether. Unless the present Boards of Aldermen and Councilmen take speedy measures towards its completion, the Battery will remain for two or three years longer in the unsightly condition which now renders it a disgrace to the City. Whatever is contemplated as to its future—whether it is to be made a fine down town park, commanding an almost unrivaled prospect, and comforting our citizens, during the Summer heats, with cool breezes from the Bay, or whether it le to be converted into piers, slips, and wbarves, for the increasing demande of our commerce, let it be put in decent order soon. The old contract being illegal, the present Common Council have power to make another.

There is no reason why the enlarged portion of the Battery, marked out, but not yet filled in, should not be completed during the coming Summer, and some definite conclusion reached as to the uses to which the twenty-four acres of ground that will then be lying waste are to be converted.

The Worth Monument.

The Committee of the Board of Aldermen on the "Worth Monument," of which Alderman HARRIS ie Chairman, went on Thursday to view the piece of ground which has been selected as the site of the Worth Monument. The spot is bounded by Broadway and Fifth avenue, between Twenty fourth and Twenty-fifth streets.

The foundation will be 16 feet square and 8 feet deep, of MORR's quarry building stone, leveled up in courses 10 inches high. A cell will be formed in the foundation, which cavity will be 4 feet below the bottom bed of granite base; the cell to be 9 feet long and 3 feet sqnare; the bottom, sides and cover to be of North River blue flag, each in one stone, 5 inches thick: the cell to be air and water tight. On the front of it will be a tablet of white marble, 3 feet 5 inches square, and 8 inches thick, on which will be engraved in sunken letters the name and date of the birth and death of Major-General WORTH. The tablet, when properly placed and secured, will seal the mouth of the cell.

There will be 2 bases of granite, the first 15 feet square and 22 inches high; and the second, 10 feet 3 inches square hy 3 feet 6 inches high. The moulded base will be 9 feet square and 2 feet high, in one piece. The die will be in one piece, 7 feet 6 inches square by 6 feet high. Three sides of tho die are to have sunk panels, 3 inches deep, with moulded stiles, and the fourth rough panneled for the reception of bronze sculpture. The plinth is to be 0 feet 6 inches square, by 2 feet high, in one piece. The shaft is to be 55 feet 10 inches long by 5 feet square at the base, and 3 feet square at the mitre, and in not more than eight pieces.

On the first panel will be placed, in alto relievo, an equestrian figure of the Major-General cast in bronze, which casting will be 6 feet 6 inches long by 5 feet high. For the front table on the plinth will be provided, in alto relievo, the arms of the City and State. On the opposite, the family arms of the General. For the remaining tablets on the plinth will be provided wreaths of oak and laurel in bronze. On the first block of the shaft will be a trophy of arms, the composition being from implements of war in service in Chippewa, Lundy's Lane, Florida and Mexico. The bands of the main shaft are to contain names of places and battles. The name of General WORTH will be cut in raised letters on the second base.

The amount appropriated for this purpose by the Common Council is $25,500. On the completion of the monument the remains of General WORTH will be removed from Greenwood Cemetery, and placed beneath the monument.

Committee on Streets.

The Committee on Streets of the Board of Councilmen met on Friday, to hear evidence and discuss the question of opening Robinson-street.

The Chairman, Councilman BOOLE, stated that a petition had been offered by Councilman MONROE to have Robinson-street widened. The original petition had been lost or mislaid, hut he, the Chairman, had got another copy of the names that were appended. He would be glad, if any one who had signed that petition were present, that he would speak to the question. The petition had been presented to the Board. There were about fifty names appended.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, (for Messrs. E. and J. P. CHAMBERLAIN,) who said he had signed it, asked whether the names on the remonstrance were those of persons liable to assessment.

Dr. TRENOR replied that the names were those of respectable property owners.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN thought an adjournment a fvisable.

Mr. GOOLD HOYT opposed the adjournment. The matter had been already referred, it was desirable to proceed. It had been advertised; it was detrimental to the property owners to delay action.

Dr. TRENOR thought the anxiety of Mr. HOYT to proceed was founded on just grounds.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN pleaded for the delay of two weeks to get up another petition.

The Chairman said, that as buildings were going up, perhaps in deference to the other side the delay might be properly less than a fortnight.

A gentleman asked whether "names" or "owners" altered streets? There were not twenty owners in Robinson-street.

The Chairman replied that the Committee wished to consult the feelings of property owners.

Mr. HOYT said that two weeks was too long, merely for the purpose of getting those 40 or 50 names appended to a new petition.

Mr. J. C. HILES said several of the remonstrants were present, but only one or two in favor of the movement. They were ready to state their objections if no adjournment were determined upon.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN wished for a fair chance, and argued for two weeks' delay. The Committee agreed on a week from Monday next. That might or might not be the last meeting. His object was to get the matter within the Session.

Several gentlemen were present for the purpose of advocating before the Committee the opening of Baskman-st. through the Park to Broadway, as a relief to that thoroughfare, but the subject was not reached at this meeting.

Adjourned until Monday week.

Longer Terms for the Medical Colleges.

The North American Medico-Chirurgical Review—a very promising bi-monthly, by the way, compacted ont of the old Philadelphia Medical Examiner and the Louisville Review, published now at Philadelphia by LIPPINCOTT, and edited by Drs. GROSS and RICHARDSON—advocates lengthening the lecture terms of the medical colleges, or, rather, it urges that the true way to teach medicine to classes is, for some well-established institution to announce a collegiate year, with terms and vacations of appropriate length, offering, of course, no less talent than is now concentrated on an unnatural, staving, four months' course, and with equal clinical advantages. With the hospitals, infirmaries, dispensaries, refuges, asylums and material that New-York furnishes, glorious opportunities the medical student would have for laying the foundations of his medical education deep and sure. The system generally in vogue a few years ago was a great farce. Within that time great improvements have been made. Instead of simply reading a chemical lecture, and amusing the class occasionally with pyrotechnics, the Chemical Professor in the best schools now takes the class in divisions into the laboratory and requires of each member the analyses, testings and experiments that the lecture has detailed. The clinic is made a practising school, for students, not simply an exhibition for the gratification of their curiosity. Still much remains to be done before the medical student in New-York shall enjoy it tithe of the rich opportunities here afforded. Whether the full collegiate year could be made self-supporting is very questionable, however. If we are rightly informed, the schools now in existence, with only the four months' course, are not all paying extravagant dividends either to professors or stockholders. We advise our New-York men, however, to watch closely the Philadelphians; they—of the Quaker City—with far less advantages for the purpose have a long start of us, and their experience makes even their suggestions valuable.

Be Careful of Your Babies.

Stealing children for the purpose of obtaining a reward upon restoring them, is to be quite a profitable business in this City. The infamous vagabonds who practice it entice the little ones away from home, and detain them until they see the rewards offered in the newspapers, when they re-appear, pocket the handsome reward, receive the hearty thanks of the parents, and very likely on their way back to their dens steal another. Several cases of the sort we have heard of within the last month

THE FIRST OF APRIL AND THE MAN WHO WAS NOT FOOLED.—We have elsewhere remarked that the 1st of April produced as many hoaxes as any other within our recollection; but in spite of these facts the people of New-York were not all hoaxed. There was one man whom we knew who had a straightforward purpose on that morning, and carried out without being deceived a particle. He was a man who wanted a new hat, and remembering how thousands are every day hoaxed with the inferior fabrics of irresponsible makers, went to KNOX, No. 212 Broadway, corner of Fulton-street, and bought a hat that day. There was no "April fool" in his purchase. KNOX furnished him with a hat of his matchless Spring style, neat, tasty, light, and durable, worthy the wearing of any man in America, or any man in Europe, for that matter; and our friend who was not fooled went home on that evening fully contented with the world and himself, and complimented hy all his friends upon being a better looking man than ever. KNOX has the finest Spring style in the City, and all his friends know it.

LONG ISLAND.

Fire at Berdan's Bakery.

Yesterday afternoon, about 4 o'clock, while BERDAN'S Mechanical Bakery in Fulton-avenue was in full operation, the whole establishment was thrown into the utmost confusion by an alarm of fire being given. Smoke was discovered proceeding from the roof of the building near one of the smoke flues, and it was immediately discovered that the wood work around it was on fire. Mr. BERDAN had just before left the bakery to return to New-York, but hy the prompt and energetic action of the workmen, directed hy Judge KIMBAL, the fire was kept under until the arrival of the fire engines, when it was wholly extinguished. The loss will not prove serious, and the machinery of the oven was kept in constant operation turning out bread during the whole time that they were engaged in extinguishing the fire. The fire was occasioned by the imperfectly constructed chimney flue, the wood work near having been charred by the heat.

Brooklyn Entry Thieves.

As a lady was sitting at her window in Livingston-street, opposite Gallatin-place, in Brooklyn, last evening about 9 o'clock, watching for the return of her husband, she saw three well-dressed young men stop at a house, opposite, as though they were looking for something. They looked carefully around them for a moment, and then one of them ascended the steps softly and opened the door with a latch-key while the other two remained at the foot of the steps. Instantly the man at the door made a grab at the coats hanging on the hat stand and threw three of them down to his companions, when the lady opened the window and screamed "police, thieves! police!" with all her might. The thieves ran with their plunder, the neighbors rushed to their doors; windows flew up and the neighborhood was in an uproar, but no policeman appeared, and the rascals escaped. It was bright moonlight, close by Fulton-avenue, and not far from the City Hall. But the police were not around, in that neighborhood, at least. The thieves took three overcoats, and dropped one; one of them belonged to a gentleman who had just arrived from Albany. If any of those rascals should attempt the same game in that neighborhood again they will not be likely to escape so easily, as all the neighbors have provided themselves with revolvers to be used on such occasions.

Judge Rose.

Judge ABRAHAM T. ROSE (Surrogate of Suffolk) has been seriously sick with a disease of the heart for some months back. Twice the County Court has been adjourned in consequence, and the business of the Surrogate's office is getting badly behind. Under the existing law no deputy can do the Judge's business.

Obstructing Justice.

A few nights ago a pickpocket was arrested in Brooklyn for picking a pocket of a porte-monnaie, containing a sum of money. The thief was caught in the act by a Deputy Sheriff, the property recovered and the thief taken to the Fourth District Station-house, where the complainant was directed to appear the next morning. It is alleged that the officer making the arrest when the complainant appeared the next morning, told him that no offence had been committed as he had got his money back again, and by management kept him out of the way, and no complainant appearing the prisoner was discharged. This is the case referred to by Judge MORRIS in his charge to the Grand Jury.

Fire in Brooklyn.

The alarm of fire at 5 o'clock last evening proceeded from the Mechanical Bakery on Fulton avenue, and was caused by a defect in the flue. The fire was extinguished without much damage to the premises.

Foundling.

A male child one week old was left at the door of Hon. HENRY C. MURPHY, on Washington-street, Brooklyn, Thursday night. Mr. MURPHY, not desiring any such addition to his family, turned it over to Capt. SMITH, of the First District Police, who yesterday placed it in care of the Superintendent of the Poor.

Flatlands

Mr. JOHN L. RYDER, American, was elected Supervisor in Flatlands, on Tuesday last.

King's County Hospital.

Thirty-six patients were received into this Institution during the past month, 47 were discharged, and four died. Total number remaining, 446.

NEW-JERSEY.

The Gas Company Trouble.

At the last meeting of the Jersey City Common Council, a resolution offered by Alderman THOMPSON was adopted directing the Corporation Counsel to call upon the Jersey City Gas Light Company and ask the fulfillment of the terms of the resolution of 1851, for the lighting of the streets by that Company, and to report the result of the application to the Common Council.

The passage of the resolution was opposed by Alderman THOMPSON, who said he knew that the Company would not comply; the consequences would be an injunction upon their works, and the result would be extensive illumination.

The resolution of [illegible] granted the Company per mission to lay their pipes in the streets, provided they would light the City lamps and furnish private consumers with gas, as cheap, and of as good quality as that of the Manhattan Gas Company of New-York.

The resolution of Alderman TILDEN was adopted; three members voting in the negative, viz.: THOMPSON, CLARK and DRAYTON.

Supplement to the Daily Times.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, APRIL 11, 1857.

BOOKS OF THE WEEK.

The last number of the North British Review has an elaborate article on "Style," in which the reviewer makes comparisons of the styles of the great prose writers of the present day, and gives the praise to our EMERSON of being the best stylist, if we may use so awkward a word, now living, among English authors. But style is too arbitrary a term to be used in so general a sense. Mr. EMERSON's style, for his own purposes, is the best possible; but we are not so sure that it would be the best if put to other uses. In a noval, for instance, it would lack fullness, ease, and picturesqueness; and for narrative purpoess it would be found too close and epigrammatic. Each writer's style is the best for himself, and the worst for any other writer. THACKERAY's style is inimitable for the conveyance of his own humorous thoughts, his sarcasms, his wit, his descriptions of men and manners, and his Mephistophilien viewe of men and things. Bnt let DICKENS attempt to imitate the style of THACKERAY, or let THACKERAY himself attempt to form his style after EMERSON, and the result would be a melancholy fiasco. Style is both individnal and local. Each age has its own style, which is the natural and spontaneous growth of the manners of the time. In the time of SHAKESPEARE and BACON style was a very different thing from what it was in the days of ADDISON and SWIFT, and now in the time of DICKENS and MACAULAY, it is more different etill.

The etyls of Young America has a distinguishing trait of its own, which is a much better expression of the manners of the time than can be found in the Essays of Emerson, which are simply pnre examples of literary art, as free from blemishes almost, as a prize dahlia. But the style of EMERSON lacks the perfume of the wild flower. It is in our less scholarly writers that we must look for the trne American etyle, among a class who write without the restraining consciousness that the eyes of the nniverse are upon them; and among them will be discovered the outgushing of a new stream of intellectual cnltnre. IRVING formed himself after ADDISON and GOLDSMITH, and COOPER after SCOTT. The first of our authors who gave indications of an individnal style was HAWTHORNE, whose grammatical purity of form and voluptnous sadness of feeling were new in literatnre. The Mosses from an old Manse and the Scarlet Letter were as striking instances of origioality as the Pickwick Papers or Pendenois. Their like had nst before been seen in print. EMERSON has been most absurdly called an imitator of CARLYLE, and even this reviewer in the North British makes the strange mistake of calling him a disciple of SARTOR RESARTUS: but he is in no sense Carlyilsh, snd, in his etyle, is far away from the North Britoo. The next show we made in etyle, after HAWTHORNE, was in Typee, and, after that delightful visiou came the Nile Notes. Neither of theee booke was like any other book, nor were they at all like each other. They were alike only in their sensuous originality, their freedom of feeling, their purity of form, and independendence of all the conventionalities of style before knowu snd recognized in the old world of literature. This was neither licentiousness nor affectation, but simply freedom. It was easting the old scales of puritanism, and coming out in a new, bright, and sparkling exterior, and with new vigor and eoppleness of joints. They were new writers in a new country; neither English, French, nor classical, but American. Typee and the Nile Notes are not noticed by the North British reviewer, but they will exact attention by and by.

The author of Typee has again come upon us in one of his strange vagaries, and calls himself The Confidence Man. His pnblishers are DIX, EDWARDS & Co., who seem to have an affection for our young authors. Mr. MELVILLE's Confidence Man is almost as ambiguous an apparition as hie Pierre, who was altogether an impossible and ununderstandable creature. But, in the Confidence Man there is no attempt at a novel, or a romance, for MELVILLE has not the slightest qualifications for a novelist, and therefore he appears to much better advantage here than in his attempts at story books. The sceue of the Confidence Man is on the Mississippi ou board a steamboet, and the whole element of the work, though full of book learning, is as essentially Western and Indianesque as one of COOPER's Leather-Stocking Tales. It is, in short, a Rabelaisiau piece of patch-work without any of the Rabelaisian indecency. And here it may be well to remark that one of the distinguishing traits of the Young American literature is its perfect decency. You can read auy of these books aloud to your grandmother or your daughter, which is more than can be done hy the majority of British books. Some of the local descriptions in the Confidence Man are as striking and picturesque as the best things in Typee, and the oddities of thought, felicities of expression, the wit, humor, and rollicking inspirations are as abundant and original as in any of the productions of this most remarkable writer. The volume has an end, but there is no conclusion to the book; the last chapter might have beeu the first, and the author intimetes that there is more of the same sort to come.

Apropos of style: the Bostou publishers ot LONGFELLOW's poems have just issued, in two neat little blue covered and gilt-edged volumes, the prose writings of the ex-Cambridge professor. The prose of LONGFELLOW is read because his poems are popular, and not for auy special excellence that belongs to it. His style is that kind of characterless writing, which nearly all well-edusated and refined persone of the present day employ on both sides of the Atlantic. It is the level, elegant, and correct style of scholarly gentlemen, the style of PRESCOTT, of EVERETT, of BANCROFT, of JEFFREY, of GROTE, and a dozen others. It is no style at all, but simply the common medinm for the expression of common thoughts. Take any chapter of LONGFELLOW and ask any critic to say who wrote it, and whether it were the production of an Englishman, or an American, and he could not tell. Bnt, still it is a pleasant etyle, and the two little ultra-marine volnmes are very pleasant books. They contain "Outre Mer," "Hyperion," "Kavanagh," and some translations from the German.

Apropos again. Here are two volumes of Essays by W. ALFRED JONES, A. M., entitled Characters and Criticisms, and published by J. Y. WESTERVELT. Mr. JONES is an essayist after the model of ADDISON and STEELE, but uecessarily with a liberal infusion of American thought and feeling. His way of looking at subjects, however, is bookish, and the titles of his essays have an odor of the library; as, for example, the first essay is on ADDISON and STEELE; then come others on PHILIP QUARLES, JEREMY TAYLOR, ELIJAH FENTON, WALTON'S Lives, Prose of BARROW, POPE and his Friende, GRAY and COWPER, on Prefaces and Dedications, MINSHULLE'S Essayes, and other topics of a similar scholarly character; there are, also, many essays and criticisms on later subjecte and current topics, all of which are treated in a genial, sensible, and scholarly manner, indicating a well-cultivated mind, a most amiable nature, a refined taste, and a most liberal and catholic fondness for what is good in literature and art without reference to eect or country. Amoog the flashing corruscations of our erratic literary producers it is most pleasant to find a work so free from all the raw flippancies of the day. Mr. JONES has even preserved the antiquated custom of publishing a list of the subscribers to his booke, as was done in the days of DRYDEN and of POPE. The greater part of these essays had already been published in our popular magazines and literary journals.

Reprints are in the ascendant, as they always are, for that matter. We have from TICKNOR & FIELDS a neat volume containiog the Dramatic poems of Barry Cornwall, and "other poems now first printed." It is more than forty years since this nom de plume first appeared, and now the owner of it makes hie appearance for the first time under his own proper name of B. W. PROCTER, with a small preface touchingly announcing that this is probably the "last time he shall try the patience of the public." The public has never manifested any impatience with him, or at him, but has always thankfully taken whatever he has offered it, read and remembered his poems, and sung his songs. The miscellaneoue poems now first printed are very numerous, written long time ago, and on a great variety of subjects. They will, of conrse, be to his admirers the most welcome part of the volume, which closes with a "Farewell to Verse."

> The winds are muts; the river dares not sing—
> Time lifts his hand—and I obey the sign.

It is all over with BARRY CORNWALL so far as anthorship is concerned; but we hope he may live many yeare to enjoy his fame and the five thou. thousand ponnde sterling which one of his literary admirere recently bequeathed him. The English volome, of which this is a reprint, is the very loveliest example of book-making that has appeared since the time of that luxury of the art, Rogers' Italy. We wiso the Boston publishers could have affoided to reproduce it. When HORACE WALPOLE printed Gray's Odes et hie non-aristocratic press, at Strawberry Hill, with illnstrations by BENTLEY, he fancied that he had achieved a miracle, bnt what a burlesqne it was compared with the English edition of BARRY CORNWALL's last volume.

Our nicest lookiog books comes from Boston. A new firm there, WHITTEMORE, NILES & HALL, have published in a very pleasant volume the admirable biographies of literary men in the Encyclopædia Britannica, and have given dne credit for them, too, in a capital introduction, written by a gentlemnsly scholar, or a scholarly gentleman, as the case may be. The biographies are of various men, commencing with ADDISON and ending with DAVID HUME, from the pens of various authors, but the chief of them are the lives of JOHNSON and GOLDSMITH by MACAULAY.

The meaning and mystery of schools, the true aims of edncation, what to learn and how to learn, are still as debatable points as they were in the time of Montaigue or Tristram Shandy. In a nation like ours, where educational institntions are univereal, and every boy and girl is sent to school, there ought to be some fixed ideas npon the snbject; hnt our teachere are still at school, snd new syetems are daily broached for improving the minds of youth. Here we have a volnme entitled School Amusements, or How to make the School Interesting. By N. W. TAYLOR ROOT. Published by A. S. BARNES & Co. There are a good many sensible hints in this small treatise, but the great aim of Mr. ROOT is to teach the art of military training in schools, which, no donht, may be made beneficial to the bodily health of boye, whether it be profitable to their minds or not.

The Story of a Pocket Bible is a rather ponderous autobiography, something on the model, though very different in style, from the History of a Guinea. It is a religious novel, in fact; a reprint and illustrated. Published by WILEY & HALSTED.

REDFIELD, who has republished all the works of Rev. Dr. RICHARD CHENEVIX TRENCH, has just issned a slender volume containing five sermone preached by the author hefore the University of Cambridge, on the nature of Christ.

Stories of the Island World is a very pleasant little volume about Madagascar, written by CHAS. NORDHOFF, and published by the HARPERS. The author tells his own experisucee, and gives his readers vivid eketches of Ceylon, Java and New-Zealand, as well as Madagascar.

CHARLES DESILVER, of Philadelphia, adds to the stock of good school books, The Intermediate Standard Speaker, hy EPES SARGENT, and new editions, with interlinear translations, of HORACE and CÆSAR.

A very serviceable little book for Western immigrants, hy C. C. ANDREWS, entitled Minnesota and Dacotah, has been published by ROBERT FARNHAM, of Washington. It consists of letters descriptive of a journey made in those Territories in the Autumn of 1856.

The second volume of the important and valuable publication, Benton's Abridgement of the Debates of Congress, has been published by APPLETON. This volume includes the debetes from December, 1796, to February, 1803.

We are indebted to Mr. VALENTINE, the Clerk of the Board of Aldermen, one of the few City officials whose special fitneee for his place compels all parties to keep him in it, for the Corporation Manual for 1857, a work full of valuable statistical information, and a great variety of local historical matter.

Putnam's Monthly for April has made a dash into the great magazine difficulty of illnstrations. Good reading alone will not satisfy the multitude; there must be a double appeal made to the imagination, and the page must be literally pictured that is intended for general circulation. What is the reason of this? Have writers grown less forcible, or are readers less lively and acute? Why must literature go hand in hand with drawings? Is not the descriptive power of the pen sufficient, hut, after Mr. JAMES has described his horseman who might have been seen, must the aid of the artist be called in to make the horse and his rider actually visible to the reader? DICKENS does not find it necessary to illustrate his Household Words, neither does Blackwood. Bnt publishers are the best judges, beyond a qneetion; they have opportunities for measuring the public taste, and for testing the public endurance, and, if they decide that pictures are necessary, who shall quarrel with them? We shall not; all that we have a right to demand is that they shall be careful not to make the illustrations the prime object, and the literary matter of their publications secondary. We shall anticipate, ere long, an illustrated quarterly, and the North American will be startling us with some lively wood-cuts, illustrative of its heavy reviews. Putnam's illustrations are good for a beginning; the first article ie an illustrated criticism of that pleasant work, MACKIE's history of TAI-PING-WANG, the great rebel leader of China. Following this is a very amusing article on Tails, illustrated with. designe hy our very best comic draughtsman, JOHN MCLENAN. In this number of Putnam, at least, there is no diminution of interest in the literary contents, and the illustrations are so much clear gain. There are some very readable articles, among which is one on "Our Authors and Anthorship," in which the merits of MELVILLE and CURTIS are critically and justly analyzed. The serious article on Fillibustering is an admirable review of the carecr of WALKER in Nicaragua. It is well done as a piece of historical narrative, and every way commendable in the view taken of the moral and political aspects of this great fillibustering fiasco. Hereafter, it is reported, this popular magazine is to be copiously and beautifully illustrated hy wood cnts from original designs.

WAYS TO THE SOUTH SEA.

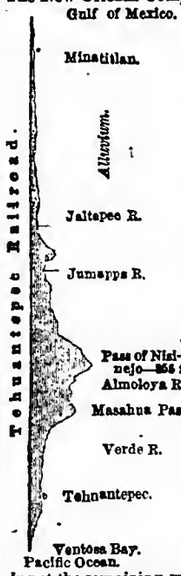
It was a sad oversight of NUNES BALBOA, when he found the great South Sea, not to have found some shorter way to it than about the southern capes. From his days to ours the water route has remained nnbridged. The trader has still to plough his circuitous way aronnd the protuberance of Brazil, and through the storms of Good Hope and the Horn, notwithstanding all the reiterated charges of gallant adventure at the ice-blockade of the northwest passage, and all the surveye effected in the centre with a view to ship-canals. Like a great deal of other unfinished business left over hy our unenterprising forefathers, and which we of the nineteenth century have taken in hand and dispatched, this of finding or making a middle passage by water to the South Sea devolves npon us, and has grown so urgent that we may look—who knows how soon?—to its triumphant achievement. The old superstition—for geography as well as religion has its superstitions—that the water of the Pacific was so much higher than the Atlantic as to render an aqueduct impracticable, is thoroughly disproved. There is no such inequality of rank to prevent a marriage. The stubborn range of Cordilleras raise themselves between, and forbid the banns; but that difficulty science stands ready to obviate, either by climbing, with locks, over the mountain summits or by penetrating their bowels with tunnels. Railroads, too, scale their peaks, by means of aspiring gradients and decided curves; so that all the possibilities of a middle passage, whether by water or rail, are simply demonstrated. It is is only left for capital to run over some calculations as to the cost and profit of the connection, before it shall be accomplished. The road from Aspinwall to Panama has pioneered the way. Not inappropriately might we allude to BROWNING's nervous thought:

> "'Tis in the advance of individual minds
> That the slow crowd should ground their expectation
> Eventnally to follow—as the sea
> Waits ages in its bed, till some one wave
> Of all the multitudinous mass extends
> The empire of the whole, some feet, perhaps,
> Over the strip of sand which could confine
> It fellows so long time; thenceforth the rest,
> Even to the meanest, hurry in at once,
> And so much is clear gained."

The several thoroughfares, completed, constructing, or merely contemplated, are in number six, namely: the Tehuantepec Railroad, the Honduras Railroad, the Nicaragua Canal, the Chiriqui Turnpike, the Panama Railroad, and the Atrato Canal. We give the names in inverse order with their several distances from the equator. In glancing at the relative merits of these enterprises, let us begin with

THE TEHUANTEPEC RAILROAD.

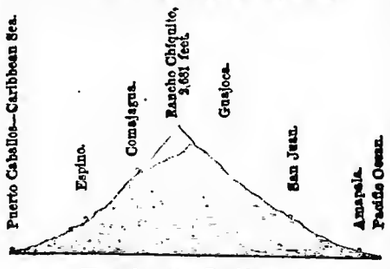
The Garay grant: who has not heard of it? How Señor JOSE DE GARAY obtained from SANTA ANA, as long ago as 1842, the right to create a communication, wet or dry, across this Isthmus, with liberal concessions of land, powers and privileges? How GARAY delayed, and the American war in ervened, stripping Mexico of vast territories at the North? How the discoveries of gold in California and Australia suggested that the best possession still left her was the transit of this Isthmus, and how they repudiated the Garay grant, which had passed in the meantime, through several assignments, into the hands of a New-Orleans company, and resumed her rights in all their extent? How under the more enterprising régime of Gen. COMONFORT, the actual President, the work of constructing a railroad has been commenced with Mexican energy, which may complete it in the lapse of an age or two? The natural features of the country are more favorable to the creation of a railroad than of a canal. Señor MORO, who surveyed it many years since with an eye to the latter, found the scheme practicable, though demanding a long series of locks, the summit elevation of 684 feet above ocean level having to be overcome. Enough water to supply these successive locks was found on the table-lands; but the formidable cost of their construction has probably discouraged the enterprise, for the present, at least. The New-Orleans Company, organized under the worthless grant of Señor GARAY, had the ground carefully surveyed in 1851, with a view to a railroad, found a choice of available routes, and a possibility of still better ones being discovered. Their search for the latter was, however, cut short by the interference of the Mexican Government. The one fixed upon hy Major BARNARD, the Chief Engineer, has been adopted, we believe, hy the present managers of the work. The path over the Cordilleras is indicated by the following profile—a profile, unscientific reader, being such a side view of the ground traversed by an improvement, as if the earth on one side were all cleared away down to the sea level, and you were looking at the remaining wall of rock and ground.



The greatest height to be overcome hy this track is 855 feet above the Pacific waters. The direction is southwest from a point not far below Vera Cruz; the distance from the Gulf of Mexico to the Bay of Ventosa, on the Pacific, is 186 miles. The advocates of the Tehuantepec transit claim for it the advantages of traversing a more healthful region than others further south; of shortening the distance to San Francisco from New-York by the Panama route, some 1,500 miles; of being remote from the possessions of European Powers, which command the other thoroughfares. It is, on the other hand, objected that the winds and currents of the Pacific terminus are unfriendly to the access of sailing craft; an objection, however, equally applicable to all the ports contiguous to the Isthmus. The local traffic of the river Coatzacoalcos is certainly of great value, nearly eight thousand tons of mahogany having been exported thence last year, chiefly to the United States. Recent intelligence from Guatemala proves that the confidence of President CARRERA in the railroad enterprise is so perfect, that he has already chartered a line of steamships to connect Istepa with Tehuantepec. In the meantime, a carriage road has been so far completed across the Isthmus, as to warrant Colonel A. G. SLOO, the head of this special undertaking, in contracting with the Government of the United States for the transmission of a semi-monthly mail between New-Orleans and San Francisco. Colonel SLOO proposes to commence in the course of the Summer.

HONDURAS RAILROAD.

Mr. E. G. SQUIER, of Nicaragua notoriety, has been running about the world these three years with a Honduras Railroad in his breeches pocket. Disgusted with the Nicaragua project, he prospected Honduras for a better, discovered a gorge in the mountains admitting of a bold escalade, and through it laid down his route. The survey, effected in 1853, yielded a profile extremely presumptuous in its characteristics. Here it is:



Honduras Railroad.

The height attained, 2,681 feet, is formidable, but not impracticable. The road is designed to commence at Puerto Caballos, close down in that angle of the Caribbean Sea which is formed by the Belize and the north shore of Honduras, and runs directly south to Amapala, 160 miles away upon the Bay of Fonseca, Pacific side. The most obvious remark suggested by inspection of the map is, that its approaches on the east are controlled by the British settlements at the Belize, a circumstance disadvantageous to any American interest in the road, while it forms a powerful recommendation to an English Company. We accordingly hear that London capitalists have adopted it, designing to push the work with the utmost diligence.

The recent treaty between Her Majesty's Government and Honduras, in relation to the Bay Islands, and the Belize, had the pacification of that vicinage in sight, as an inducement to the undertaking. Mr. SQUIER has been met by the opinions of careful engineers, who pronounce his scheme impracticable. Others have sustained him; and as each men as the Governor of the Bank of England head the new Company, we are to assume that the balance of authority is in his favor. The Government of Honduras is especially gracious to the enterprise, because it connects Comayagua, the capital, with both oceans.

NICARAGUA CANAL.

A ship canal through Lake Nicaragua was a pet project a century ago. Governments and private companies have time ont of mind procured surveys to be made demonstrating the possibility of the work; without, however, bringing it within the limits of reasonable cost. The estimates have, in fact, in every instance, frightened the speculator away. Six or seven years since, the prospect became so luminous that the British and American Governments deemed it prudent to provide at once for the neutralization of the route, whence sprang the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, of dubious memory. Both the project and the treaty have, however, come to nothing; and who shall propose the revival of either, while the struggle between WALKER and the natives continues? The ultimate practicability of the enterprise is probably ascertained, notwithstanding the criticisms of Mr. SQUIER. The San Juan River to the lake may be supplied with locks, and other slack-water arrangements, so that 120 miles of the distance may be overcome; the lake, which is 105 feet above the Pacific, may be traversed by vessels of deep draught to Lajas, 56 miles; whence a cut embodying a series of locks fed from the lake may conduct to the Pacific, at Brito. Or, extending through Lake Managua, the route may debouch at Realejo, a more elaborate and extensive work, without attractions to capitalists. Of the line hy the way of Brito accept the annexed portrait:

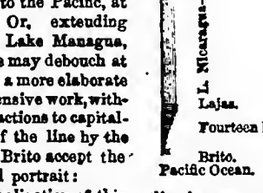
The realization of this outline is, we repeat, a question of time.

CHIRIQUI TURNPIKE.

The Chiriqui lagoon lies in the northern edge of the State of the same name, which is the northernmost province of New-Granada, and adjoins Costa Rica. The lagoon is midway on the map between Greytown and Aspinwall. Two American companies have directed their attention to this locality—the Chiriqui Improvement and the Chiriqui Real Estate Companies,—the former with a view to constructing a broad carriage-way for the transit of passengers from the lagoon to David, a port nearly ninety mile distant upon the Pacific. The height of the Cordilleras discourages the idea of a Railroad, while the same difficulty, and the absence of water, forbid a Canal. The great productiveness and abundance of local traffic of the country must repay generously the less costly work.

PANAMA RAILROAD.

While the rest of the world has talked itself weary of Isthmus transits, New-York has made one. The Panama road owes its existence to the celebrated traveler JOHN L. STEPHENS, who first conceived the plan, and inaugurated the necessary surveys. It departs from the Island of Manzanilla, in the Caribbean Sea, whereon stands the city of Aspinwall, ascends the Sierra steadily until within a few miles of the Gulf of Panama, attaining a summit level of 255 feet; when, by a grade of 60 feet to the mile, it descends to the Pacific waters at Panama. The entire length is 47.6 miles.

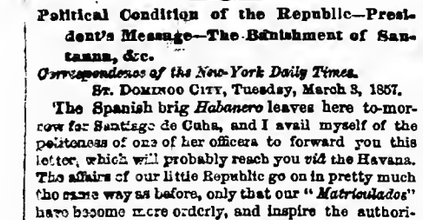


Panama Railroad.

In order to accommodate the urgent demands of California travel, it was built in the first instance with no regard to stability. The work of straightening abrupt curves, reducing grades, and replacing wooden bridges and water-ways with stone masonry, now engages the Company. Eventually the road will be one of the most useful in the world. As is the case with the Honduras road, there is little prospect of a water channel in the neighborhood, owing to the absence of sources at a sufficient elevation to supply the locks.

ATRATO CANAL.

The Emperor of the French, we are told, has recently become deeply interested in a canal leading from the Atrato River to the Pacific Ocean. This is the track pointed out hy VON HUMBOLDT, as the only one he belisved practicable. The Atrato River is a broad and deep tributary to the Caribbean Sea, discharging into the Gulf of Darien. The examination effected at the cost of Wall-street enterprise, shows that the Atrato and the Truando, one of its estuaries, may be made navigable for the largest vessels, one hundred miles, to a point twenty-five miles from the South Sea. The latter twenty-five miles require some heavy excavations, and a double tunnel three miles long, and high enough for the "mast of a tall ammiral" to pass through. The expense of such a work is prodigious; the estimatee call for some $150,000,000, hut as the canal is to be without locks, running therefore upon the level of river and sea, its advantages may perhaps balance the initial extravagance of cost. The height of the Sierra, through which the tunnel is designed, appears in the profile to exceed slightly 500 feet.



Atrato Canal.

The Chiriqui Turnpike, the Panama Railroad, and the Atrato Canel, are wi hin the hounds of New-Granada; and must therefore class as South American enterprises. Between the last two is a long stretch of Isthmus, traversed by the inexhanstible Cordilleras, through which exploration has thns far sought an available passage valnly. Poor STRAIN, after squanderiog the lives of his companione, and barely saviog his own, found no practicable depression. The half-dozen routes we have indicated are therefore the only ones known, or likely to be. We may meke up our minds to be contented with the choice they offer us.

As to cost, it is hard to say how large it ought to he to prohibit the hope of a profitable return. Considering the immense value of the East Indies trade, Europeen and American; considering the near prospect of enlarged intercourse with Japan and China; considering the growing empires of Australia and California; the wealth of the South Sea Islands; the opulence of the South American coast; the extent of the Pacific whale-fisheries; and finally, considering that all these are only accessible at present hy tedious, expensive, perilous voyages from six to ten thousand miles longer than the paths through the Isthmus; can we donht the value of these latter channels of intercourse? To avoid the Southern Capes of frost, and cloud, and storm, what transhipments at Tehuantepec, or Panama, hy the railroad, would not be economical aod wise? What canal tolls would be large enough to drive the merchantman around the Horn, rather than float through the calm waters of an aqneduct, the "journey of a Sabbath day l" There is certainly very little doubt that Central America will presently be the world's highway.

FROM ST. DOMINGO.

Political Condition of the Republic—President's Message—The Banishment of Santana, &c.

Correspondence of the New-York Daily Times.

ST. DOMINGO CITY, Tuesday, March 3, 1857.

The Spanish brig Habanero leaves here to-morrow for Santiago de Cuba, and I avail myself of the politeness of one of her officers to forward you this letter, which will probably reach you viâ the Havana. The affairs of our little Republic go on in pretty much the same way as before, only that our "Matriculados" have become more orderly, and inspire the authorities with less suspicion, particularly since the departure of Señor SEGOVIA, who was the life and soul of all the disturbances that have threatened to undermine our political existence.

It is well known that President BAEZ's sympathies are with the European powers, and that he is secretly sworn to the French interest that has for years past been exerted to bring about a union of this part of the island with the negro empire of Hayti. His display of dismency towards SANTANNA was founded on the hope that the French Governor of Martinique would punish him by death or perpetual imprisonment. His message, a translation of which I subjoin, is a strong evidence of his anti-American ideas and plans.

MESSRS. SENATORS—The constitutional precept, in unison with the intimate wishes of my heart, brings me in your presence to-day with the purpose of displaying to the eyes of the nation ths faithful picture of its present state. I say exact, because ths first duty of my position is to represent the situation of the country in its true colors without any exaggeration.

Thanks to DIVINE Providence, this picture will not sadden us, for if much is wanting to complete our organization, there are grounds to hope for a brilliant picture, which is not far removed.

It is quite natural that a small and weak State, which only counts thirteen years of existence, should find itself still remote from the climax of its prosperity, the more so as foreign enemies and domestic obstacles have assisted in impeding its march, and when the weak hands into which, with far different hopes, I gave the helm of State on finishing my first term, far from stimulating that progress, made it retrograde. Public opinion authorizes to make this assertion, solemnly and lawfully expressed and confirmed by the Lenado Consultor, as I shall say hereafter; and if I mention this fact of universal notoriety, it is not from a desire to recriminate, but because I feel obliged to declare to the Republic that when her voice called me to the power for the second time, I have found the Government weakened and disorganized, quite different from the flourishing etate in which my successor had received it.

Fortunately for the Republic, the favor of Heaven has not entirely abandoned us, as it is evident in the preservation of our friendly relations with the foreign nations who are our allies and friends.

In the midst of this satisfaction, I am grieved to inform you that the hopes manifested in my message to Congress in 1853 in reference to our relations with the common Father of the Faithful were shamefully blighted. I then remarked "that the Government believed it to be of urgent necessity and of the highest importance for this Catholic people to celebrate a Concordat with the Holy See. For this purpose, and in order to have a representative in Europe in the serious circumstances of that epoch, Dr. ELIAS ROBIGUEZ was appointed plenipotentiary. Favorable results are anticipated from his mission. Now these desirable results, and at that time easy to be obtained, were frustrated by the persecution which my successor raised against the Catholic Clergy, revenging himself on our most respectable and virtuous prelate, on the very worthy priest charged with the mission to Rome, on other pastors, unmindful that, according to the words of the Gospel, he ran the risk of dispersing the flock. I need not say that this situation cannot be prolonged, and that it is necessary to join again the broken chain that is to unite us with the head of Christianty, till we obtain a concordat that will regulate and cement the position of the Dominican Church. Such is the purpose of the Government, and it hopes to carry it out in a short time.

The indication that I have just made of the good state of our relations with foreign powers, does not exempt me from the grateful duty of making special mention of France and England. The bloody contest sustained by those powers in the East had been a material obstacle to the mediation terminating in the work of settlement between the two States of the Spanish Island. But the Government of Her Britannic Majesty and of the Emperor of the French, who have never for a single moment belied their benevolence toward us, as soon as peace had been made with Russia, again busied themselves with our relations with Hayti. The first effect of their active exertions has been to make the Haytien chief promise a truce for three years, thus affording a sufficient period for fixing the basis of a definite treaty. This result may appear trivial, but it is not so, if we take into consideration that it is the beginning of still greater ones, and, above all, an evident proof of the sentiments which animate the mediating powers.

Our ancient mother Spain has not shown herself less favorable towards us. The frankness and generosity of which she gave proofs when she celebrated the treaty recognizing our independence, and the cession of this territory, have continued to reign throughout all her relations with this Republic. The question of the Matricula, the cause of certain difficulties, and the object of a special negotiation badly directed by the two preceding Administrations, appeared to the Dominican Plenipotentiary to be resolved; but as the interpretation lately given by her Catholic Majesty's Government to the seventh article of the treaty is substantially the same, and even broader than that of her Consul General, the present Administration, believing that this may produce troubles, has proposed a modification of the article to the Cabinet of Madrid. The result can but be reciprocally satisfactory, because I am induced to hope so from the benevolence which Her Majesty, the Queen, and her Government have ever shown us, and the noble and frank deportment of their representative in Saint Domingo.

The satisfactory state of our foreign relations has been momentarily compromised in the interior. The parties injured by General SANTANNA's administration, raised their voices to ask for justice. The "Lenado Consultor," the worthy depositary of the laws, could but hear this petition; but here arose one of those grave difficulties that sometimes place Governments in a serious conflict. How could we have convinced the civilized world, with which we are endeavoring to identify ourselves, that our justice was not a revenge, that our judgment of his term, to which every ruler must subject himself, was not a political reaction? This was indicated to me by the three representatives of our most intimate allies, Spain; France and England and receiving this insinuation with pleasure, I presented myself before you to lend it my influence.

The Senate then gave a remarkable proof that it knows how to raise itself to the sphere of political convenience, and authorized the Executive to act according to the exigency of the circumstances. The people also, (because the petition against General SANTANNA must be called popular,) the Dominican people gave an example of forbearance such as is seldom seen. Happy the Chief of a free State who finds such virtues to praise in his people. Observe, gentlemen, the Dominican; see how he can be brave against the invading enemy; strong against tyranny; generous with the vanquished, and docile to the rulers. Look at him and confess that such a people deserves to be happy, independent and free.

But the ill advised General SANTANNA has not known how to profit by the goodness of our allies, nor the long animosity of the Government, the high dignity of the Senate, nor the generosity of the people. Obstinate in his hostile conduct, he favored, if he did not promote, a rising of factions in the interior. They were suppressed in a moment, thanks to the activity of our authorities and the fidelity of our soldiers; but SANTANNA's malevolence, well known, confirmed the Government in the idea that it was indispensable that he should be banished the country. Also on this occasion we have received support from one of our allies. The French Vice Admiral, COMTE DE GUEYDON, consented to receive him on board. Of this measure due notice was given to the representatives of Her Britannic Majesty and her Catholic Majesty, who manifested their conformity.

This focus of insurrection and the sparks of rebellion that had shown themselves in Neyba having been quickly extinguished, the Administration turns its eyes to the organization and improvement of the several branches that constitute it. The administration of justice first, requires its attention; but this important branch of the social life of a people has two parts, for on one side it requires the constant purification of legislation, and on the other the organization of the courts and tribunals, and the appointment of the individuals who are to compose them. Without adventuring any idea on this arduous and delicate matter, I shall limit myself to inform you that the Government is assiduously employed in preparing the reforms required by this part of the Administration.

If justice is the first condition of existence for every constituted society, the education of youth is the hope that perpetuates it. The Government looks on this branch with particular affection, for on it depends the formation of good and useful citizens. To moralize the rising generation, to educate and accustom it to work, I promise myself, gentlemen, that I will spare neither pains nor fatigues, and here, I may add, that my desires will be limited by our actual resources.

His solicitude for the organization of the army is not less, and I can insure you that the military service will soon be regulated, to the great alleviation of the people and the public treasury. Convinced that small armed forces are more easily instructed, disciplined and organized, I have created a body of troops exclusively to garrison the capital which will serve as a model and nucleus at the same time for the army that may be formed. Nothing will be omitted in this respect that our resources will justify, and as the sons of this island have given repeated proofs of their valor and patriotism, which are the two essential qualities of the soldier, there is no donbt but they will soon acquire all the rest in which they are deficient.

There also exist two plans, already resolved upon by the government, which are, in my opinion, of the greatest importance. The first is the establishment of a steamer, which, besides the utility of the general service, and placing this capital in relations with Porto Rico, will communicate with St. Thomas, the centre of so many lines of correspondence. The second is to build a bridge in front of this City. I think it needless to expatiate on the convenience of this work, which will afford an easy passage to the persons and cattle of both of the extensive territories divided by the Ozama.

In a decree, dated February 27, I have established the decree of the 20th of September, the only way, in my opinion, of remedying the disorders in the post-office which existed when I took possession of the presidency. Giving it all the importance it deserves, I shall endeavor to perfect it as far as I am able.

Such are the principal things I consider worthy of your attention. My lively wishes shall always be that our actions surpass our words; that in the moral and material advancement of our country, you may always see the present administration actively employed and practically zealous. For this reason I have preferred the brief words of this Message to the pompous display of programmes of government. Assist me in the undertaking, Senators. Let the Dominican people ever prove, as heretofore, submissive to the law, and docile to the voice of authority. May Providence bless our efforts, and I will prove to you how great is my wish is to see my country prosperous and happy.

BUENAVENTURA BAEZ.

ST. DOMINGO, March 2, 1857.

The message has been variously commented on by the different parties, hnt with all proper privacy, for it would be extremely dangerous to be too open in expressing opposition to our Parisian President. His studied silence on ELLIOT's treaty, and the absence of any reference to the United States, should convince the present Administration at Washington that some steps must be taken, and that speedily, if they wish to defend the famous Monroe Doctrine. Our point is constantly visited by the national vessels of the allied powers, and the extreme politeness which they receive at the hands of the President and his satellites convince me that something is being concocted detrimental to the interests and policy of the American people. Want of time consumed in the translation of the Message, has deprived me of the pleasure of entering more into the details of our domestic situation. I hope, however, soon to have the pleasure of sending you an interesting letter on the actual situation of this unhappy Republic. SEIBO.

The Hudson's Bay Territory Question.

Mr. Justice DRAPER having been appointed a Special Deputy to England to represent Canadian rights and interests in the matter of the Hudson's Bay Territory, of which so much is said, has received voluminous instructions from the Governor-General. The Provincial Parliament having called for copies of the correspondence, the instructions are made public. They direct the Deputy to report himself immediately to the Colonial Secretary, to offer all the information of which he is in possession to any Parliamentary Committee that may desire it, and, while forbidden to conclude any negotiatione, he is particularly ordered to operate against immigration from the United States. On this point the instructions are very full and explicit. We copy:

"His Excellency feels it particularly necessary that the importance of securing the Northwest Territory against the sudden and unauthorized influx of immigration from the United States side should be strongly pressed. He fears that the continued vacancy of this great tract, with a boundary not marked on the soil itself, may lead to future loss, and injury both to England and to Canada. He wishes you to urge the expediency of marking out the limits, and so protecting the frontier of the lands above Lake Superior, about the Red River, and thence to the Pacific, as effectually to secure them against violent seizure or irregular settlement, until the advancing tide of emigrants from Canada and the United Kingdom may fairly flow into them and occupy them as subjects of the Queen on behalf of the British Empire.

With these objects in view, it is especially important that Her Majesty's Government should guard any renewal of a license of occupation, (should such be determined on,) or any recognition of rights in the Company, by such stipulations as will cause such license or such rights not to interfere with the fair and legitimate occupation of tracts adapted for settlement.

It is unnecessary of course, to urge in any way the future importance of Vancouver's Island, as the key to all British North America, on the side of the Pacific, situated as it is between the extensive seaboard of Russian-America and the vast territory in the hands of the United States."

FRENCH ADVERTISING—A Parisian journal gives some interesting facts in relation to the history of French advertising. It says that before the year 1828, such a thing as an advertisement was comparatively unknown in Paris, and for eight years thereafter, but little headway was made. But about 1846, a better condition of affairs was established by the "invention" of newspapers at a moderate rate. The diminution in the price led to an increase in the number of subscribers, greater publicity was obtained, and as a consequence advertisements flourished. The development which this extension of advertising gave to the press of Paris, is illustrated by the official returns of the papers published in that city. In 1829, only 28,000,000 stamps were issued. In 1843, 61,000, were issued; and in 1846, the number reached to 80,000,000. Indeed, the system of advertising is yet in its infancy, not only in France, but in England and the United States.

PARIS GOSSIP.

The "Question D'Argent" of Dumas—Miscellaneous Literary News.

PARIS, Monday, March, 9, 1857.

THE MONEY QUESTION.

The Question D'Argent of young DUMAS is still one of the serious occupations of the moment. The criticisms, eulogies and apostrophes it has provoked, would make half a dozen volumes the size of the play itself. Even MIRES, the great Jew banker, has written in the columns of his journal, the Constitutionnel, a feuilleton on the subject. It is true he tries to prove that the author of the new piece does not understand the Bourse in all its lights and shades as well as he, MIRES, who has made twenty millions there in a very few years; but his feuilleton, which is his first literary attempt, none the less gives renown and notoriety to the author criticized. The piece of DUMAS makes no pretensions either to plot, to situations, or to any of the ordinary by-play for dramatic effect. Unlike his other works, compromised female character forms no part of the play. It is a quiet, but powerful criticism on the contemporaneous mania for money, in which the whole success of the piece is concentrated in the force and the bearing of the words spoken. Of the whole four of the younger DUMAS' plays, it is the only one that could be literally translated for the stage of London or New-York. The piece will soon be produced in London, which is the first time this author has ever succeeded in getting before a London audience. Even your modified American Camille—that of Miss DAVENPORT, the most modified of all—was rejected by the London censors.

You recollect the "basket of peaches," a figure of speech in the Lemi Monde which had so great a success. The author has attempted to profit by this sort of episodic writing in the Question d'Argent, as you will see by the two following extracts from the third act: De Coyolle, a rich railroad speculator, is teaching René, a man of leisure, lessons on the necessity of every man doing something for the State.

"Listen to my plan." says De Coyolle, "for a civil conscription. It is a conscription of my own invention, and one of the simplest things in the world. It will serve as a pendant to the military conscription, and may even replace it, for it is probable that, in a given time, all the nations of the earth will be united by interest, the arts, commerce, industry, and that war will disappear from this world; when that period arrives, society will demand no more of men than the tribute of their intellectual capacities. When a man arrives at the age of twenty-one years, the State will go to him, and say: 'Sir, what career have you embraced? What do you do for mankind?' 'Nothing, Sir.' 'Ah! do you wish to work?' 'No, Sir, I do not wish to work.' 'Very well—then you have a fortune?' 'Yes, Sir.'" In that case, Sir, you are liberty not to work, but you must take a substitute. You are going to give a certain sum annually in order that people who have no fortune shall work for you, and we will give you a certificate of laziness, with which you can circulate freely.'"

De Coyolle explains the invention of bills of exchange. "When work, that first law of humanity, shall become general, (by the new law of conscription,) as is, indeed, money, specie will become insufficient in quantity to represent it, and it is possible that this currency will be suppressed. That seems to you impossible, like all undiscovered things; but one day it will be as simple as any discovery that has been made. Listen: formerly, we will suppose, a Parisian bought a country house at Marseilles for a hundred thousand francs. What did he do? He put his hundred thousand francs in cash in a diligence, and sent them to the seller, escorted by a special guard. On the road highwaymen attacked the diligence, killed the guards and shared the money. Other guards were sent in pursuit of the robbers, and another battle took place. At last, the robbers being taken, they were hung, and society was avenged; but confess that that was an enormous amount of trouble and expense to buy a country house. One day a gentleman, who had a large sum to pay at a great distance, and who was an honorable man, said to himself: 'But what is the use of taking so much trouble and incurring so much expense in sending this large sum of specie to my creditor, who, if he owes it to another, will be obliged to do the same thing, and so on to others? What is the use of deranging so many gens d'armes and so many robbers? I am going to keep the money at home, and write to my creditor that I will pay it to him at his first requisition; if he has the same sum to pay, he will send my letter to that person and thus my letter may make the voyage around the world, without the capital changing its place.' This gentleman had simply conceived the idea of the bill of exchange, and from that day the public commenced to understand that money was almost nothing, and that credit was everything."

THE EXCADENCE OF THE LITTERATEURS.

Young DUMAS is right in attacking this question of money. He was right too in standing aloof from the great literary dinner of MILLAUD, the money-god. Since the class of literary men came into existence, there never was such an example of mammon-worship as this. Two weeks ago, MILLAUD, as I have already told you, gave a Babylonian feast to the journalists and literary men of Paris. But a few years ago this banker was but an obscure Jew, who lived in a garret, and had not often a sou to buy his dinner with. By a series of fortunate stock operations he has risen to the position of a millionaire, and once arrived at that position he now seeks notoriety. His first movement to this end was to buy a journal. In his first attempts he failed, but finally he obtained the majority of the shares in the Presse, those held by M. DE GIRARDIN, at the enormous price of $165,000. But this did not suffice, and M. MILLAUD determined to make a bold stroke for popularity and notoriety, in giving a grand fête to the journalists and littérateurs of the town. They were all invited to the number of three or four hundred. The golden hotel of the Place St. George's received new additions and new beauties to its already gorgeous decorations. The fête was in every respect a grand affair.

Before the event came off a report had gained circulation that each convive was to find under his plate a thousand franc bill. To this report M. MILLAUD attributes the abstention of many of the really distinguished men invited: the two DUMAS, JULES JANIN, M. DE GIRARDIN and others; but one is surprised that any man believing such a report could have so far forgotten his dignity as to attend. And yet in the long list of those who bit at this open bid for popularity, we see the names of MERY, PONSARD, Baron TAYLOR, the Duke of ST. SIMON, THEOPHILE GAUTIER, EMILE AUGIER, AMEDEE DE CESENA, GRANIER DE CASSAGNAC, PAUL DE ST. VICTOR, CREMIEUX, MICHEL LEVY, NESTOR ROQUEPLAN and a host of other men of high standing in the world of letters.

But now see the result of this affair. Ever since the great event, the journals and the public are filled with M. MILLAUD. You cannot open a printed sheet that does not sing the praises of M. MILLAUD in song, in prose, or in toast. But the most humiliating part of this exhibition has been afforded by M. MERY. This gentleman, a member of the French Academy, and one of the first of living poets, not only prostrated himself before the golden calf, but he made a speech at the dinner in glorification of mammon, and its representative, the host. To render his position still more humiliating, he subsequently published a feuilleton in the Presse on the now defunct Frascati's, in which there were whole columns of brilliant poetic improvisations and classical allusions, and which he terminated by saying that all this was spiritually recounted to him by M. MILLAUD, the new proprietor of that once famous house! So M. MILLAUD has gained his point. He has subjugated the man who manufacture popularity, and he can now take his seat in the classic sanctuary erected by MERY, PONSARD, and others of the immortals who occupy the fauteuils of the Academy of France!

After that who will dare to resist the power of the golden god?

OTHER CURIOSITIES OF THE MONEY QUESTION.

From the question of money one falls naturally into the Bourse. Since the advent of the tourniquets and the franc entrance fee into that sacred temple, a singular sort of human telegraph has been invented for a non-paying communication between the agents in the inside and their clients under the trees. When the agent wishes instructions he rushes to the side portico, and forming with his hands a kind of speaking trumpet, he thus shouts to his clients in a cabalistic jargon only understood by themselves, and receives his instructions in the same way. For some time this was carried on without a suspicion on the part of the officers of the character of communication that was going on; and when at last the truth was established, they hesitated as to their duty in the premises. But the Prefect of Police did not long hesitate, and now this ingenious dodging of the tourniquet has been abolished.

During the month of January, as I believe I have already told you, there were 1,750 yearly subscriptions to the entrance of the Bourse taken. The price of subscription is $30 a year. The sum total of money taken for that month was $24,000. On the list of yearly subscribers each name must be followed by a mention of the profession of the owner, and this list shows some curious facts. Not to speak of bankers, merchants, clerks, etc., etc. who naturally form the major part of the subscribers, one sees the following: 1 astronomer, 15 hair-dressers, 3 vaudeville-writers, 4t porters, 11 restaurant servants, 3 cow-keepers, 7 actors, 19 doctors, 1 lawyer, 1 lyrical poet, 103 journalists, 1 academician, 1 ramasseur de bouts de cigars—(picker up of cigar stumps!)

The gatherer of "old sojers" cannot be classed under the head of a speculator; for his commerce is based on sure and certain chances, on the real daily product of the place. Each day will give him from 1,500 to 2,000 ends of cigars, and as these command a handsome price at the snuff and tobacco manufactures, his industry is surer of handsome returns than that of the class who furnish it.

The Bourse of Paris possesses one feature of speculation to which your Exchange is a stranger. A certain number of agents are named by the Government—60, I believe—who have the sole right to speculate within the interior of the bar of the Bourse, and who regulate the rises and the falls. They almost uniformly become millionaries, and, of course, their places are much sought after by all those who are scrambling after a fortune in this way. One of these privileged gentlemen, M. LEHER, sold his place a few months ago for 1,900,000 francs, and last Spring some of these places were bought at 2,200,000 francs! At this moment one of these agents who wishes to retire to the comforts of a private life, is arranging with a successor at 2,000,000. In 1848, this place was bought for 350,000 francs, so that independent of the immense gains he may have realized in that time, he makes a clear profit on his place of 1,650,000 francs.

But then this money does not all enter into the pocket of the seller. He leaves in the office he abandons, for the waste of his successor, a capital which varies from a half to a million. But for this the price of these places would have never acquired the figure at which we find them. And then there are a limited number of associates, recognized by the chamber of syndics and "interested persons" who may be multiplied indefinitely. All these agencies are more or less subdivided.

This subdivision is easily understood as applied to the great majority of agents, for when a man possesses in France a fortune of 2,000,000 of francs, he is generally ready to retire from business.

But here is another singular feature of this special agent system. They never speculate on the Bourse themselves—so at least they profess. Some time ago a rich man wished to buy an agency, (a rare thing, as I have already shown,) and the Chamber of Syndics refused to receive him into the Company, on the ground that he had made his money playing at the Bourse! And it is not difficult to understand this scruple on the part of the authorized agents. They are trusted with the millions of their clients throughout France. Their business is to buy and sell—for a per cent.—so as to gain the most money possible for their clients. If they were to allow themselves to be drawn into the vortex of speculation on their own account, they might become ruined, and in the ruin might also crumble the fortunes intrusted to them by their clients. If one such event occurred per year, it would destroy the profession, for no one would longer have confidence in an agent de change. If an agent was sure of gaining a million in any enterprise whatever, he would gain it for his clients and not for himself. The Chamber will not even admit a repentant into their midst; for, like CÆSAR'S wife, they must not be suspected.

MALAKOFF.

The Academy of Medicine—April Meeting.

The regular meeting of the New-York Academy of Medicine was held Wednesday evening, Dr. VALENTINE MOTT, President, in the Chair. A large number of members were present. Dr. J. HUGHES BENNETT, of Edinburg, Scotland, and E. H. PEASLEE, of Dartmouth, N. H., were elected corresponding members. Several resident members were also elected. Dr. ISAACS also read a valuable paper detailing the results of his original anatomical investigations respecting the height of the pleura above the clavicle, and its width at that point. The facts presented were upon a point overlooked by anatomists and writers generally, although of great importance to the surgeon and pathologist, as well as curious matter for the anatomist. The facts presented were the results of observations upon one hundred bodies. The chief fact elicited was, that there was great variation in the height to which the pleura rose, corresponding somewhat to the length of the neck of the individual and the sex, and that it was diverse upon the two sides—facts of as little practical importance. The deviations of the subclavian artery and its branches, was also in this connection adverted to. The paper was referred to the Publishing Committee.

THE MEMORY OF DR. KANE.

The Committee appointed at the last meeting to prepare suitable resolutions respecting the death of Dr. E. K. KANE, reported. Dr. FRANCIS, the Chairman, stated that since the Academy had done him the honor of appointing him to this duty, he had departed from his usual manner and had prepared some imperfect expression of his feelings.

Dr. FRANCIS proceeded to read as follows:

As a member of the Committee appointed by this Academy to offer for your adoption, should they meet your approving decision, resolutions on the death of the late Dr. ELISHA KENT KANE, I can scarcely withhold a remark or two on this melancholy occurrence. The occasion is one of profound consideration. The lamentable fact of his early death has now become widely known, and wherever known is regretted with a sorrow that has scarcely limitation, and is felt as almost a personal bereavement. The expressions of that grief have been already diffused throughout our vast Republic, and never has an individual character, unassociated with the dignities of high official station, received loftier commendation from the national voice. His death seems to have reached the hearts of the entire American people and will doubtless be sympathized with by the wise and the good of the Eastern world. I consider the late Dr. KANE to have been one of the most remarkable men of his time, and to have already been recognized as such. His physical and mental energies are hardly to be found recorded in the ample page of Biography. With a constitution singularly delicate and refined, with a corporeal development that gave no special tokens of great muscular strength, of a size below the ordinary height,—slender, susceptible and of quick movement,—he evinced a power and capacity for laborious service and marvelous endurance in trial beyond that which the stoutest and the strongest have shown. Though what might be popularly called a diminutive man, he was of fair proportions, of compact elements, comely and attractive in appearance. I betray in no wise the confidence of friendship, when I state, what I derived from his own lips just before his last departure from New-York, that his greatest weight had been 9? pounds, and that during a portion of his Arctic career it did not exceed 93 pounds.

His intellect was of a peculiar order, alert, rapid in combination, and of large forecast. He was analytic and synthetic. His range of thought was wide, his combinations singularly immediate. The simple and the compound were equally open to his perceptions. Early disciplined in the schools of literary and scientific instruction, with such faculties, his acquisitions were great and various. To a fair scholarship in the ancient languages, he added the sciences of astronomy, navigation, natural history, in its several relations of botany, mineralogy, geology, chemistry and the departments of physics which fall within the compass of a liberal medical education. He was an artist; he was an ethnologist. He was a searcher after truth, an explorer of the mysteries of nature, and perilled life in his devotion, with the daring of a soldier, and the stimulus of a scientific adventurer. He studied philosophy, as the handmaid to useful purposes. His confidence rarely halted, however surrounded with difficulties. On the contrary, unexpected occurrences were no obstacles, but met with new devices; and assurances of hope, presaged in the midst of conflicting issues. He was a mighty traveler; had seen men and cities widely remote; had borne vicissitudes of divers climes, and miraculously survived the assaults of pestilence in its most hidden forms. China, India, and Ceylon, the Pacific and her isles, Egypt and the Nile, loathsome Africa, lovely Greece, Mexico and her antiquities, were his preparatory trials. Nothing that unfolded the handiwork of nature was ever indifferent to him. He contemplated a pebble—he surveyed a pyramid. He was a disciple of God's garden. It was rare indeed that you encountered an individual of his cosmopolitan experience. His conversational talents were most engaging; terse in description and contentions; prompt in utterance and discriminative; he secured an audience at will, while the conviction of his own belief and his ample knowledge led captive the auditor of his eloquent logic. As his speech was glowing, so too we find his writings; clear and vigorous, united with a bewitching rhetoric, at once enlarging our comprehension and fathoming the heart. No writer of fiction has assumed a truer sentiment than he betrays in his narrative of the Arctic explorations. His work has become a fire-side companion, and the icy world grows familiar as the parlor story or the devotional hymn. Youth forsakes his school-boy recreations to study its astounding incidents, and listening old age marvels how long it has been kept ignorant of the wonders of Providence. Tears are shed at the record of his multitudinous hardships—how many have burst from his own anguished eyes at the sufferings of mortals he has met amidst the vicissitudes of his adventurous life!

Dr. KANE was too guileless to be able to conceal the benevolence of his nature, and his manly sensibility gushes forth spontaneously whenever the noble instincts of humanity are summoned into action. I am told he was a rapid writer; that he sequestered himself, after his last return, within the apartments of his library, greatly to the detriment of his already wasted health, in order to bring forth his captivating volumes at brief summons, for the gratification of an anxious public, and it is wonderful to think that while in the Arctic regions, with all its horrors, with his disabled crew, and himself wearied, and the victim of disease, he could have penned such beautiful thoughts, so abounding in imagery and in description, always subjected to a harmoniously religious meditation. How eminently practical he was in every mood, in every reverse! How admirably he preserved the integrity of these three special rules which he adopted upon his embarkation! They were rigidly adhered to through all the vicissitudes of the expedition. He said: "We had no other laws"

I have spoken of his physical powers and of his intellectual qualities: let me glance at those of the heart. That organ which I may say constitutes the microcosm of man in his social state, in Dr. KANE was by nature tender and devotional, and by culture had become possessed of the great elements of Christian philosophy. Modesty and humility found favor within his breast. With a fortitude and a perseverance that would have entitled him to the admiration of a Zeno, he had the winning simplicity and tenderness of the gentler sex. In his most familiar converse no word dropped from his lips at which even fastidious modesty could be annoyed, and to his own transporting achievements he rarely made reference unless to satisfy the curious inquirer; for he fully understood that the interests of humanity far outweighed in his generous bosom commercial extension or geographical knowledge. The plaudits of mortals were less in his estimation than the approving smiles of heaven. He was in the simplest acceptation of the term a philanthropist. While memory retains her seat, so long shall I cherish the recollection of his enthusiastic utterance to his noble friend HENRY GRINNELL, in reference to the then still hopeful prospect of the recovery of Capt. FRANKLIN and his companions. It yields untold comfort to my anxious mind, involved in the cares of professional toil, sometimes to remember that while a child I had seen ALEXANDER MACKENZIE, the first white man who traced his way across the Rocky Mountains and gazed upon the Pacific Ocean; that I cherish a personal knowledge of Capt. FRANKLIN and his companions and biographer, Dr. RICHARDSON; and that KANE, an American explorer, who was the first who came within sight of the great Polar Sea, can be recorded as a personal friend.

The eloquent and able eulogist, Rev. C. W. SHIELDS, in his thoughtful and appropriate address, at the interment of Dr. KANE, has beautifully said: "Let us believe that a faith which supported him through trials worse than death, did not fail him when death itself came." Another intimate friend of Dr. KANE thus expresses himself: "But above all,—governing and guiding all,—there was a spirit of true Christian benevolence and Christian dependence. This it was that nurtured and sustained him in times of his greatest suffering and anxiety; this it was that gave him firmness, confidence and power, before which the rudest spirit cowed." Testimony abounds that, though weakened and worn to an extreme degree, his mind rose superior to his physical sufferings, and preserved its faculties entire; that he was conscious of his approaching end, and prepared for the change. His Christian confidence wavered not; the benignity of his nature was edifying throughout all his sufferings; and one of his very last expressions was, that he held in little estimation that man who was afraid to die. Dr. KANE adds another imperishable name to the long catalogue of the members of the noble faculty of physic, who, in their lives and in their deaths, have enriched the panoply of faith by labors in humanity, and who, by their writings, have demonstrated the excellence of the Christian's hope.

The following resolutions were then presented by Dr. MCNULTY:

Resolved, That while the nation recognize, in the explorations of Dr. KANE, services honorable to the country and auspicious to humanity, we, his professional brethren, deplore his early death as a loss to our entire profession, of which he was one of the most distinguished ornaments.

Resolved, That the benevolent enterprise and the scientific enthusiasm he so nobly manifested, are the great principles of action which sustain the character of our profession and reflect glory on its members.

Resolved, That the self-devotion, assiduity, and moral courage of the navigator were combined in him with the humane sympathies and the observant study of the philosophic physician.

Resolved, That the valuable contributions to natural history, to navigation, astronomy, and the laws of hygiene as affected by extremes of climate, made by Dr. KANE in his Arctic researches, and their deeply interesting record, place him among the most eminent cultivators of practical knowledge on the roll of modern physicians.

Resolved, That while we honor him as a man, we regard him as a brother, and deeply sympathize with his afflicted family, to whom, in token of sincere and respectful condolence, a copy of these resolutions be transmitted.

JOHN W. FRANCIS, M. D.,
A. CLARK, M. D.,
J. MCNULTY, M. D.

After the reading it was voted that the address and resolutions be transmitted to the family and be recorded in the minutes of this meeting.

PUERPERAL FEVER.

Dr. J. W. FRANCIS, deputed to open the discussion upon the contagiousness of Puerperal Fever, did so at some length. He advocated the contagiousness of its character and its specific origin with much earnestness, but somewhat briefly; he adverted to the views of the older writers, that it was considered to be a fever like ordinary fevers, but differing in its locality, until GORDON, in 1789, commenced a controversy not yet finished.

He was followed by Dr. J. M. SMITH, who considered it to be not sui generis, but evidently contagious. Dr. S. read a labored essay, of some hour or more long, giving a résumé of the literature of the past and present day upon the subject.

After a highly interesting meeting, the Academy adjourned at a late hour, to a special meeting, on Wednesday, the 15th inst., further to discuss this subject.

Relief for Broadway.

The public have recently been startled with the intelligence from Albany, that the Legislature are likely to pass a bill, chartering a Company to lay down a railroad from Forty-ninth-street to Fulton-street, running parallel to Broadway, on the west—extending through a part of Seventh-avenue, and a part of Broadway, through Union-place, University-place, Waverley-place, Greene-street, &c., &c., to Fulton-street.

The ostensible motive for this project is the relief of Broadway, now choked and encumbered with omnibuses, carriages, carts, &c.

There are many weighty objections to this project, while the argument in its favor is very questionable, if not positively fallacious.

The reasons against it are open, and of very wide application. In the first place, experience has abundantly shown that these railroads degrade the streets through which they run; their rails cut up and embarrass the way; the cars usurp the road; they keep the pavements in a state of constant disorder; they make it inconvenient and disagreeable for private carriages to run in these streets, and drive wealthy residents, as well as rich purchasers of merchandize from them.

Hence, property along these railroads is degraded in public estimation, and reduced in pecuniary value. Therefore, along the whole line of the proposed railroad, from Forty-ninth-street to Fulton-street, the property owners are opposed to this scheme.

Besides these special objections, there are others more pervading and permanent. These railroads are monopolies; they are taking privileges from the many and granting them to the few. There is, therefore, an inherent and wise aversion to them in the community—only to be overcome by manifest public necessity. This necessity has not been shown. At the same time, several causes are in operation to stimulate this natural objection to any new monopoly, and especially to this one. The rail cars in this city, to a great extent, are badly managed; they do not adapt themselves to the public wants; they are often crowded to suffocation; they are, in many cases, unwholesomely filthy; their management is often attended with impertinence and imposition. These generous grants of the people have become public nuisances in many cases. And yet, anchored in chartered privileges, these companies pocket their pence, laugh in their sleeves and set the public at defiance.

These are some of the objections against these City Railroads in general, and the proposed one in particular.

It is obvious, therefore, that, as well on the grounds of justice as general policy, no new Charter should be granted, unless its utility—nay its necessity—be first demonstrated. Neither of these points have been settled. It has not been shown that if the streets proposed to be given up to a Railroad, were well paved and made the line for omnibuses and cars going down town, would not give equal relief to Broadway.

Nor has it even been shown that the proposed Railroad would secure this object. It would, probably, have exactly the opposite effect. The cars would engross those streets some three miles in extent, parallel to Broadway. For this whole distance it would drive private carriages, wagons, and other vehicles, into Broadway, and thus make confusion worse confounded.

Finally, it would seem to be an act of extraordinary rashness for the Legislature to adopt such a scheme as the one proposed, until it has been fully examined and discussed by those most interested—the citizens of New-York City. Opportunity for such discussion has not been given, and hence, it is reasonable to suppose, that the proposed project will be deferred to some future session of the Legislature.

A REPUBLICAN OF THE OLD SCHOOL.

HARVARD COLLEGE.—A friend informs the Watchman and Reflector that a gracious Divine influence appears to be reaching this ancient seat of learning. Five students have recently turned to Christ, and others are more or less deeply impressed. Professor HUNTINGTON, under the expressed conviction that "Jesus of Nazareth is passing by," has established a prayer meeting for the special benefit of those under its spiritual charge. The above record is significant, as following so soon the prayer day for colleges and other institutions of learning. Let Harvard University continue to be remembered in earnest prayer by all them who "love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity."—Christian Inquirer.

A Tribune Strain.

"Our neighbor is wrong—grievously wrong."
Tribune, March 26.

That strain again, the same old song,
"Our neighbor is wrong—grievously wrong."
It rings with a clang, like a Chinese gong,
"Whatever is, is sure to be wrong;"
Whoever don't to the Tribune belong
"Is always wrong—grievously wrong."
The Tribune's talk
Is like an old fork
With only one rusty prong.
"You are all wrong—grievously wrong,"
On this one point the Tribune's strong,
"Our neighbor is wrong—grievously wrong."
It never varies this dull ding-dong,
'Whatever is, is always wrong."
The Tribune's cry, it's short and it's long,
"Our neighbor is wrong—grievously wrong."
It never appears its neighbors among,
Without the yell "you are all wrong."
To Gentile and Jew it cries "go 'long,
You all are wrong—grievously wrong."
It turns up its nose at Bohea and Soucheng,
And declares that both are grievously wrong.
Will it never change its dismal song,
But still the stale old groan prolong,
"Our neighbor is wrong—grievously wrong?"

Burning of the Sultana.

As some particulars have been published of the destruction by fire, lately, of the steamer Sultana, on the Mississippi River, it may not be uninteresting to your readers to learn the whole of the circumstances as they occurred under the eye of one of the passengers. This ill-fated boat was one of the larger class, being probably three hundred feet in length, a fine vessel, though she had served out the greater portion of her time as seaworthy. The accident occurred on the night of Wednesday, the 25th of March, between 8 and 10 o'clock, about two miles below Hickmen, Ky., and thirty-five below the mouth of the Ohio. I was sitting near the rear end of the main saloon, while the forward portion was occupied by a number of card and gambling tables in full blast, with etceteras, when suddenly the gratification of the absorbing passion was brought to a pause, and the sound of the "flodle," and the boisterous laugh, and the "betting," and the horrid oath were exchanged for the shrieks of terror and the appalling cry of "Fire!" The first notice of our danger was conveyed by some ladies rushing forward from the hinder part of their cabin and calling for water. The fire commencing in that part of the boat, below, had already made its appearance in some portion of their state-rooms. Instantly the alarm was communicated throughout the vessel, and a general rush was made towards the foremost part. Seeing no signs of danger, I did not at first fully realize the condition of things, and did not partake in the general panic, but went calmly to my room and stopped for a moment to consider whether I should attempt to save my baggage. I was soon convinced, however, that not a moment was to be lost, as on opening the door of my room connecting with the balcony or side promenade, I found unmistakable signs of the rapid progress of the devouring element. The bow of the boat was swinging swiftly around, and heading for the right bank of the river, which was lighted up by the glare of the flames from beneath, while shouts and cries, and the dashing of the vessel, and the raging of the fire, mingled in wild confusion. I caught up my overcoat, carpet-bag, and umbrella, and determining, if possible, to save my trunk, I seized one end of it, and hurried forward to the gangway. By this time the boat had gained the bank, making a tremendous plunge into it, and was kept from rebounding by the force of the engine, until secured. Most fortunately it proved to be a partially shelving bank, that might be climbed without much difficulty. As the most of the passengers had already preceded me in the early rush, and were now ashore, leaving the way comparatively clear, I rushed down the stairway, still dragging my trunk, and thus, with a number of others, likewise succeeded in gaining the bank, when, for the first time, something like a thrill of horror came over me, as I looked around, and saw the hideous fate we were escaping. By this time the fire had rapidly advanced, and the greater portion of the vessel was enveloped in flames. In fact, so rapid was the work of destruction, that, while I was still struggling, with the aid of another, to get my trunk up the steep bank, an explosion of a boiler took place. It was feared, for a time, that a few persons, in their precipitancy, had rushed from the boat, before it was secured to the bank, and had been either drowned or crushed to death, but I rejoiced to find that these fears proved groundless, as it was afterwards confidently affirmed that no lives were lost. Happily there were but few ladies and children on board; of these a few had retired early, and narrowly escaped in their night-clothes. The most of the passengers lost their baggage, and with it their money. The fire was said to have originated in the room of the watchman, but the accounts were various and conflicting. The conduct of the officers and hands belonging to the boat appeared to be every thing that the trying emergency demanded. At this part of the river the channel was on the right side ascending, and we were happily not many rods from the bank. It was soon found that the tiller-rope was burned in two, and the wheel consequently useless. In this fearful crisis we were saved by the firmness and presence of mind of the engineer, who is worthy of the substantial gratitude of all on board. He continued at his post until he had turned the head of the boat to the land, then turning on the whole power of the steam, he sought safety with the rest. The fire was observed by the people of Hickman, and immediately a large crowd of persons proceeded to the scene of the disaster. The passengers and crew remained some time on the bank, when they were kindly relieved by a small steamer which took them up to the neighboring town, where they awaited other steamers bound upward.

From the Toledo Commercial, April 6.

Through the politeness of our worthy Sheriff, S. J. SPRINGER, Esq., we last evening paid a visit to R. J. M. WARD, who gave us the following confession in relation to the murder of his wife: WARD seemed to be deeply affected, frequently interrupting his disclosure by exclamations of deep sorrow and regret for the crime he had committed, and giving us a full and complete disclosure of the same. After taking down his confession, we read the same to him, when he pronounced it correct; we give it to our readers as we had it from his own lips, in the presence of the Sheriff and others:

CONFESSION.

"On Tuesday evening, Feb. 3, Mrs. WARD and myself had some words, during which Mrs. WARD struck me on the head with a fluid lamp, also on the right side of the nose, causing the same to bleed freely. I begged her not to strike me, took the lamp away from her and went to bed. We arose between 6 and 7 o'clock on Wednesday morning. I spoke to her about the blow she had given me, showing her where she had struck me on the evening previous, also the blood on the holster and tick. She said she wished I had bled to death, and picking up a stick of hickory wood, she attempted to strike me. I warded off the blow, which fell upon my right thumb, laming it severely. The stick fell from her hand, and she stooped to pick it up. I seized a flat iron, and in the heat of passion, struck her with it on the right side of the head, upon and under the ear, driving the ear-ring into the flesh. She fell to the floor, exclaiming, 'Oh! WARD, you have killed me!' I dropped the flat-iron and went to her; saw she lying on her side; I turned her over on her back, and placed a petticoat under her head, supposing she was only stunned. I used all means in my power to restore her, but in half an hour she died, having only spoke once, 'O, my Nellie,' meaning, as I suppose, her little girl.

After she was dead, I wrapped her head in a petticoat and drew her body under the bed, to conceal it in case any one should come in. About 8½ o'clock, WM. H. NATHAN, a mulatto boy, came to the door with some milk; came into the shop, took the milk from him and he left. I then went to LIBA ALLEN'S grocery, bought a pound of sugar. Told him I was going away. I then returned to the house, and after a short time commenced cutting up the body. I tore the clothes open from the throat down. I then took a small pocket knife and opened the body; took out the bowels first, and then put them in the stove, upon the wood; they being filled with air, would make a noise in exploding, so I took my knife and pricked holes through them, to prevent the noise; then took out the liver and heart, and put them in the stove; found it very difficult to burn them; had to take the poker and frequently stir them, before they could be destroyed; found the lungs very much decayed. I then took out the blood remaining in the cavity of the body by placing a copper kettle close to the same, and scooping it out with my hands. I then dipped portions of her clothing in the same and burnt it together, fearing, if I put the blood in the stove alone, that it might be discovered. I then made an incision through the flesh, along down each side, broke off the ribs and took out the breast bone, and throwing it into a large boiler, unjointed the arms at the shoulder, doubled them up and placed them in the boiler; then severed the remaining portions of the body by placing a stick of wood under the back and breaking the backbone over the same, cutting away the flesh and ligament with a knife; then tried to sever the head from the body; it proving ineffectual, and I put the whole upon portion of the body into the boiler; then took a large carving knife and severed the lower portion of the body, unjointed the legs at the knee and again at the hip joint; cut the thighs open and took out the bones and burnt them up; they burned very rapidly.

On Thursday night I commenced burning the body, by placing the upper and back portions of the same, together with the head, in the stove. On Friday morning, finding it had not been consumed, I built a large fire by placing wood around and under it, and in a short time it was wholly consumed, except some portions of the larger bones and of the skull. The remaining portions of the body were kept in the boiler and in tubs, under the bed, covered up with a corded petticoat, and were there at the time the first search was made on Saturday, by Constable CURTIS.

Hearing on Saturday evening that the citizens were not satisfied with the search made by Mr. CURTIS, I proceeded on Sunday morning to destroy the remainder of the body, by burning the same in the stove, cutting the fleshy parts of the thighs in small strips, the more readily to dispose of them. On Monday morning I took up the ashes in a small keg, sifting out the larger pieces of bone with my hands, placing the same in my overcoat pockets, which I scattered in various places in the fields, at different times. Also took the major portion of the trunk nails, together with the hinges, and scattered them in different places. I then burned her trunk and every vestige of her clothing, disposing of small portions at a time, to prevent their creeting too much smoke."

On the 6th inst., R. J. M. WARD, the murderer, was brought in, dressed, as usual, in a full suit of black, appearing much downcast, and as the Court commanded him to stand up, he arose, breathing heavily, his eyes fixed upon the floor, and only momentarily seeking the face of the Judge. With one hand he leaned heavily on the chair, while the other hung tremblingly at his side.

After the Judge had pronounced sentence of death, WARD knelt down, and, leaning on the chair, buried his face in his hands, weeping and groaning. He was suffered to remain thus for a few moments, as the forms of adjourning Court till afternoon were gone through with, when Sheriff SPRINGER touched him on the shoulder, and he arose, apparently much more composed, and was taken to the jail.

Arrest of a Forger.

From the Rochester Union, 7th.

A young man, probably from the West originally, appeared in this city yesterday with his pockets filled with spurious drafts. He arrived in the morning and took lodgings at the Waverley, where he entered his name on the register of the Hotel as "J. R. MORTON, Illinois." He managed to get an introduction to a young gentleman boarding at the Waverley, and through him was introduced to Mr. PALMER, teller of the City Bank. He there sold a draft for $400 on the Bank of America, purporting to be drawn by BABCUP, HASTINGS & CO., of Independence, Mo.

In the course of yesterday, Mr. SACKETT met this fellow in the street and identified him as G. W. Moony, whom he had known in New Orleans. Mr. S. called at the Waverley and inquired if a gentleman named MOONY was there. He was answered by the clerk in the negative, but on a description being given, he pointed to the name of MORTON on the register as likely to be the man. SACKETT left his card and went out. When the stranger came in he was told that Mr. SACKETT, who had known him in New-Orleans, had called. The man said he did not know any person by that name and had never been in New-Orleans. Some time later in the day SACKETT met the man and recognized him.

The fellow said he was not stopping at the Waverley, but at the Eagle. They walked along State street together, when they came to the Waverley the New-Orleans gentleman refused to go in, as he proposed, but insisted upon going to the Eagle, where he lodged. SACKETT left him, and having ascertained that his baggage was at the Waverly, and that he had stopped there, he suspected that something was wrong, and expressed his doubts at the hotel. The party who had introduced him at the Bank inquired, and ascertained that a draft had been purchased of the man and mailed for New York.

Policeman JENKINSON was informed of the facts, and he waited upon the stranger and told him that he suspected that he was a rogue. MORTON, or MOODY, said he was willing to refund the $400 if the Bank was not satisfied. So he went to the residence of the teller with Mr. JENKINSON and refunded. Mr. J. then told him he should hold him for further inquiry. He therefore took him to the Sheriff's office, and subsequently to the police office. His baggage was also seized and taken to the police office.

After some parleying, the man confessed that his name was G. W. MOODY, and said he had latterly boarded at the Howard House, New-York, but came to Syracuse with his wife on a visit, and so came up here to sell some drafts, leaving his wife at Syracuse meanwhile. Mr. JENKINSON went to Syracuse last night and ascertained that he had a wife visiting there, as he stated. On searching him about $150 in good notes on the Artizans' and Park Banks, of New-York were found, and five drafts, purporting to have been drawn by BORUP, HASTINGS & CO., Independence, Mo., on different banks, and in favor of different persons, as follows: $1,000, payable to G. R. RANKIN, at the Fulton, New-York; $500, payable to same party at the Bowery Bank, New-York; $500, to WM. H LEWIS, payable at the Corn Exchange Bank, New-York; $500, payable to the same at the Bank of America, New York; $300 to same, at same Bank.

In the trunk of MOONY was found two draft books, one in black, the other in blue ink. These books contained hundreds of blank drafts dated at the Banking House of BORUP, HASTINGS & CO., at Independence, ready to be filled up at any time.

The handwriting of MOODY on the hotel register, is now see resembled that of the signatures and filling up of the drafts; hence it is concluded that he has an accomplice. These, we believe, are all the principal facts which have come to light so far in connection with this attempt at financiering. MOODY was committed to jail to await further examination, when more testimony has been procured.

The Murder in Washington County, Penn.—Further Particulars.

The Pittsburg Post has the following additional particulars:

It seems that SAMUEL H. WHITE, of Chartiers township, who formerly resided within two or three miles of the village of Venice, had recently purchased a farm from Mr. JAMES ALLISON for $3,600; that he had removed his wife and two children to their new home about a month since; that he was to make a payment to Mr. ALLISON about the first of April; that Mrs. WHITE, being unwell on Saturday night, got up about 2 o'clock, left her husband asleep, and went into the back yard; that she heard a noise, ran into the kitchen and soon after saw two men come into the room where her husband slept; that she, filled with terror, fled to Mr. ALLISON'S, about half a mile distant; that she soon returned, with two of the Allison's, and found her husband dead in his bed, his head having been literally crushed in with an axe taken from their own wood pile; that about $700 were taken from a drawer, and $50 left untouched in Mr. WHITE'S coat; and that the children remained unhurt in a little bed in their father's room.

Intense excitement followed the announcement of the murder, and armed men rode in all directions on Monday. About 7 o'clock Monday morning, a man named BALDWIN, who had left Washington on Sunday night at 11 o'clock, and who was seen to flee from a house in Middletown, about eight miles distant from the scene of the murder, was pursued and arrested. He proved an alibi and was discharged. When asked why he fled at the sight of the officers, he said that he had whipped his wife on Sunday evening, and thought that they were after him for that. His story was found to be correct. Although diligent search was made, no trace of the heartless assassins could be found up to the time our informant left.

Bloody Affray on a Steamboat.

From the Lexington (Mo.) Express.

We are called upon to record another bloody scene which occurred on board the steamer A. B. Chambers, a few miles below this city. At a late hour of the night, a party of Irish emigrants to Kansas were amusing themselves on the lower decks with songs.

THE DRED SCOTT DECISION.

Report of the Joint Legislative Committee.

The Joint Committee of the Senate and Assembly appointed to consider and report what measures, if any, the Legislature of this State ought to adopt to protect the Constitutional rights of her citizens against the serious and alarming doctrines of the Supreme Court of the United States in the decision of the case of DRED SCOTT, respectfully

REPORT:

That they entered upon the discharge of their duty under a deep sense of the importance of the subject committed to their consideration. They could not fail to see, that the sovereignty of our State, the constitutional rights of her citizens, the protection of their free labor, her great commercial, manufacturing and agricultural interests, her extensive educational system, and the morals of her citizens, were all assailed and put in jeopardy by the unconstitutional, sectional and Pro Slavery doctrines announced by the majority of the Judges of the Supreme Court of the United States in the decision of the case mentioned; for those doctrines will bring Slavery within our borders, against our will, with all its unhallowed, demoralizing and blighting influences.

Your Committee have not been able to obtain authenticated copies of the opinions of the five Pro-Slavery Judges, who formed a majority of the Court, and proclaimed the unconstitutional doctrines which have so justly alarmed the people of this State. They have, however, abundant evidence of their contents, and of the principles they announce.

There was only one question before the Court for adjudication, and that was, whether DRED SCOTT was a citizen of the United States. No Judge of the Court had a right, and far less was it his duty, to discuss, decide, or even express an opinion on any other question or subject. Not only judicial decorum, but numerous decisions of that very Court, forbade him to express opinions on any question beside the one directly before him. Yet the five Pro Slavery Judges, disregarding official decorum and established precedents, after deciding the case before them, proceeded to discuss and express opinions on five other constitutional questions of vital importance to the Free States of this Union.

First—They express the opinion that if a Master brings his Slave into a Free State for a temporary sojourn, the Slave does not become Free. This is in direct contradiction to a cherished principle of the common law, that when a slave places his foot on Free Soil, he becomes a Freeman—a principle dear to the heart of every enlightened citizen of the Free States of our Union; and a principle which has been recognized by the Courts of all those States, by the Courts of most of the Slave States, and by the Supreme Court of the United States itself.

Second—They express the opinion that the Ordinance of 1787—the Magna Charta of Freedom in all the States formed out of the territory northwest of the Ohio—is inoperative and void—an opinion which astonishes the intelligence of the country, and is in direct opposition to the action of the General and State Governments, from their institution.

Third—They declare that the act of Congress admitting the State of Missouri into the Union, known as the Missouri Compromise, was unconstitutional and void; and thereby give the sanction of their names and of the Court, to the unmitigated breach of plighted national faith, accomplished by the repeal of that act.

Fourth—They discuss and express the opinion, that the clause in the Constitution of the United States which declares that "The Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the Territory, or other property belonging to the United States," only applies to the Territory which belonged to the United States when the Constitution was adopted, and confers no authority on Congress to pass laws regulating Territories acquired since; and thus they deny to Congress the power to exclude Slavery from them, or to authorize a Territorial Government to exclude it; while every well-informed person in the country knows that every Territory which the United States has acquired since the adoption of the Constitution, has been governed by the laws of Congress. The power of Congress over those Territories, and the authority to prohibit Slavery in them, has never been doubted or questioned, till the promulgation of the opinions of the majority of the Court in this case of DRED SCOTT.

Fifth—They declare it to be their opinion, that Slavery is not a local institution. They hold that it is not confined to the limits of the State, by the laws of which it is created, but may be carried beyond them and into the Territories of the United States. This opinion is in direct opposition to at least three solemn decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, and to the decisions of the Courts of all the Free States, and to the decisions of the Courts of most, if not all, of the Slave States of our Union. It is contrary to one of the fundamental principles of the common law, viz.: that every man has an inalienable right to his liberty, and that it can only be taken from him by a statute of the State in which he lives; and every lawyer in the profession of this law knows that the Statute of a State has no force beyond its limits.

It follows as a direct consequence of this doctrine, that a master may take his slave into a Free State without dissolving the relation of master and slave; and your Committee cannot but be alarmed and shocked at the apprehension that some future decision of the Pro-Slavery majority of the Supreme Court will authorize a slave driver, as threatened by the devotees of Slavery, to call the roll of his manacled gang at the foot of the monument on Bunker Hill, reared and consecrated to freedom.

The proposition which the majority of the Court laid down in deciding the question legitimately before them, viz.: that no man of the African race, descended however remotely from a slave, is a citizen of the United States, though born a freeman, and his ancestors for many generations before him also freemen, and though ninety-nine parts out of one hundred of the blood which runs in his veins is Anglo-Saxon, and his skin whiter, his heart purer, and his head clearer than those of the Judge who outlaws him, and though his father may have fallen in the battle at New-Orleans, on the glorious 8th of January, at the call of our JACKSON, or his grandfather served with honor, or died in battle under our WASHINGTON; is a violation of the sacred principles announced in our Declaration of Independence, hostile to the spirit of our institutions, and the age in which we live, a departure from the liberal doctrines of the common law, and opposed to the weight of judicial authority in this country and England.

Your Committee have no hesitation in expressing the opinion that this decision is erroneous, and ought to be overruled; and they believe it will be overruled as soon as the Free States have their just representation on the bench of that Court.

The attention of your Committee was arrested by a proposition, stated by Chief Justice TANEY in the opinion he delivered, as the organ of a majority of the Court, in the following words: "They (the colored race) had no rights, which white men were bound to respect." Your Committee cannot forbear to characterize this proposition as inhuman, unchristian, atrocious—disgraceful to the Judge who uttered it, and to the tribunal which sanctioned it.

The most censurable part of the conduct of these Pro-Slavery Judges, yet remains to be stated, and it is this: The five constitutional questions above stated, which were not involved in the point before the Court for decision, and upon which, in violation of judicial decorum and established precedents, they volunteered opinions, have, within the last two years, become political and party questions, have divided the two great political parties of the country; and that division, unfortunately, has assumed a sectional character. These five Judges are all located in the Pro-Slavery section, and identified with the Pro-Slavery party. Under such circumstances, if true manly delicacy will not, a decent respect for the feelings and opinions of the friends of free institutions, should have restrained them from uttering a single word, not necessary to a decision of the question before them. Yet how widely different was their conduct! They volunteered, against decorum and precedent, to identify themselves and our great National Court with a sectional party, and to bring down that high tribunal from the lofty place it has hitherto filled in the reverential respect of the nation, to the area of party and sectional strife. They have destroyed the confidence of the people in the Court, by stamping upon it a black mark of sectionalism and partizanship. They have, moreover, placed themselves and the Court they control, in the front rank of Pro-Slavery propagandism, and offensive aggression upon the rights of the Free States.

Your Committee cannot omit to notice, in this connection, the time selected by these five Judges for taking ground, officially, with the Pro-Slavery party of the country. That time was strikingly propitious to protect them from impeachment, and accomplish their purpose. A new Pro Slavery, sectional Administration was just being inaugurated, and consequently had the whole patronage of the Federal Government to aid in screening these partisan Judges from merited punishment, and produce acquiescence in their ultra Pro-Slavery, unconstitutional doctrines. The fate of Kansas, too, was then impending, and these doctrines, if carried out, would consign her to the deadly embrace of slavery. Your Committee reluctantly admit the thought, that the sectional ermine was used to cover and effect such an unhallowed purpose; but they have seen too many evidences of the desperate acts to which Pro-Slavery fanaticism leads men, subject to its influence, to lay aside the fearful apprehension, that our national Court has been brought under its dominion.

The Supreme Court of the United States was established by our forefathers to secure a fair and enlightened exposition of the Constitution, and an independent and impartial adjudication of Constitutional questions; and thereby preserve the rights of the several States and the citizens thereof. The influence and power of the Court having now been marshalled on the side of pro-slavery propagandism, and against the rights of the citizens of the free States, it no longer accomplishes the purpose of its institution. The safety and peace of the nation require its reorganization, so as to admit into it a fair and equal representation from the Free States, according to the ratio of population between the Free and Slave States, which can and ought promptly to be done by act of Congress. Until this measure is accomplished, it is manifestly the duty of this State to take and maintain a firm stand against the encroachments of Slavery, and keep this direful evil out of her borders.

To this end, your Committee announce and recommend the adoption of the proposition, that Slavery shall never pollute the Free soil of the Empire State, let the consequences be what they may; and in making this declaration, we place the Empire State on the Republican doctrines of 1798, known as the "Virginia Resolutions," which were acquiesced in by the great Republican Party of that day, and are in the following words:

Resolved, That this Assembly doth explicitly and peremptorily declare that it views the powers of the Federal Government as resulting from the compact, to which the States are parties, as limited by the plain sense and intention of the instrument constituting that compact; as no further valid than they are authorized by the grants enumerated in that compact; and that in case of a deliberate, palpable, and dangerous exercise of other powers, not granted by the said compact, the States, who are the parties thereto, have the right, and are in duty bound, to interpose for arresting the progress of the evil, and for maintaining, within their respective limits, the authorities, rights and liberties appertaining to them.

To carry into effect this proposition, your Committee recommend the adoption of the resolutions, herewith presented, and the passage of an act entitled "An Act to secure Freedom to all persons within this State," herewith also presented. ALBANY, April 9, 1857.

RESOLUTIONS.

Resolved, That this State will not allow Slavery within her borders, in any form, or under any pretence, or for any time, however short, let the consequences be what they may.

Resolved, That the Supreme Court of the United States, by reason of a majority of the Judges thereof having identified it with a sectional and aggressive party, has lost the confidence and respect of the people of this State.

Resolved, That the Governor of this State be, and he hereby is, respectfully requested to transmit a copy of this report, the law above mentioned, and these resolutions, to the respective Governors of the States of this Union.

AN ACT TO SECURE FREEDOM TO ALL PERSONS WITHIN THIS STATE.

The People of the State of New-York, represented in Senate and Assembly, do enact as follows:

SEC. 1. Neither descent, far or remote, from an African, whether such African is, or may have been a slave or not; nor color of skin, shall disqualify any person from being, or prevent any person from becoming, a citizen of this State; nor deprive such person of the rights and privileges of a citizen thereof.

SEC 2. Every slave who shall come, or be brought, or be, in this State, with the consent of his or her master or mistress, or who shall come, or be brought, or be, involuntarily in this State, shall be free.

SEC. 3. Every person who shall hold or attempt to hold, in this State, in Slavery, or as a slave, any person mentioned as a slave in the second section of this act, or any free person of color, in any form, or under any pretence, or for any time however short, shall be deemed guilty of felony, and on conviction thereof, shall be confined in the State prison at hard labor for a term not less than two nor more than ten years.

The Dred Scott Decision in the Ohio Legislature.

The Committee on Federal Relations in the Ohio House made a very full report in relation to the Dred Scott case, on the 1st inst., accompanied with a bill and resolutions.

The bill is to prevent slaveholding and kidnapping in Ohio. It provides:

1. That any person attempting to hold another as a slave, directly or indirectly, shall be fined and imprisoned.

2. That if any person shall seize or arrest, or use any force or fraud for the purpose of detaining any other person upon pretence that such person is a fugitive from service, he shall be punished by fine and imprisonment.

3. That any attempt to kidnap with intent to carry them out of the State, for the purpose of enslaving them, shall be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary.

4. That the provisions of the bill shall not apply to any act lawfully done by any marshal in the execution of any legal process.

Among the resolutions reported are the following:

That the doctrine also announced in behalf of a majority of the Court, that there exists no power in the General Government to exclude Slavery from the Territories of the United States, subverts express provisions of the Constitution, annuls the just authority of the people of the United States over their own Territories, and contradicts the whole practice of the Government under every Administration, from that of WASHINGTON to that of POLK.

That in the promulgation of the doctrine against which we now protest, we recognize the natural effect of this ascendency of the Slave power in the Supreme Court of the United States, secured by the arrangement of the Circuits, which gives to the Slave States, with less than one-third of the free population of this Union, five out of nine Judges, leaving to the Free States, with more than two-thirds of the free population, only four; and we hereby instruct our Senators, and request our Representatives in Congress, to use their best endeavors to obtain such a modification of existing laws as will secure to the Free States their just representation in that tribunal.

In addition to this, Senator GAISWOLD has reported to the Senate resolutions which, in view of Kansas outrages, propose $100,000 for the protection of Ohio citizens, to be employed by the Governor as his discretion shall dictate.

THE OPINIONS IN THE DRED SCOTT CASE.—Much inquiry is made in reference to the time when the opinion of the Supreme Court in the Dred Scott case will appear officially before the public. Hitherto only an abstract of the opinion has appeared, as reported for the Associated Press. I learn that the venerable Chief Justice TANEY has not filed his opinion in the clerk's office, but was expected to do so to-day, or on Monday. The reporter of the decisions of the Court, Mr. HOWARD, has in readiness the volume in which the opinion of the several Justices in the Dred Scott case will appear. The volume will be published in this City.

The dissenting opinions of Justices MCLEAN and CURTIS have been spread before the public through the newspapers of Boston and New-York, and before they were filed. They were not obtained from the Clerk's office. As the reporter of the Court is entitled to a copyright, it will be a violation of that right to present the opinions in full in the newspapers. It is not certain, therefore, that the opinion of the Court, as presented by Chief Justice TANEY and Justice NELSON, will reach the public through the popular press, and the impression made by the premature publication of the dissenting opinion will not be fully counteracted. It is unfortunate that the resolution offered in the Senate for printing, for the use of that body, twenty thousand copies of the series of opinions, was not taken up and adopted.—Washington Correspondence of the Baltimore Sun.

Letter from Governor Wise on the Land Distribution Scheme.

Sundry journals in Virginia are advocating the distribution among the several States of the proceeds of the sales of the public lands. Gov. WISE has written the following letter to a friend in condemnation of the schems:

RICHMOND, Thursday, March 26, 1857.

DEAR SIR: * * * I presume that no one is chimerical enough to think of proposing a redivision of the public lands themselves. Such a proposition at this time would be virtually to commence to dissolve the Union. It would be impracticable, if lawful, and the latter is as untenable as the former, unless there be a dissolution of the Union. I am opposed to this, because opposed to disunion. The question must be treated, then, as a proposition to dispose of the proceeds of land and customs in the Treasury; undistinguishable masses of money there, as a surplus, from time to time, may arise. But two modes of disposing of surplus in the Treasury, other than is pointed out in the Constitution, have been proposed, and each has been tried. Deposit with the States and distribution to the States. The objections to both are insuperable.

Money in the treasury is not distinguishable by—

First—The source from whence it comes. Whether it comes from land or customs, its use is defined by the Constitution, and it is a common fund for national appropriation.

The land fund has two sources:

1. Cessions—deeds by States to the United States.
2. Acquisitions, by
   1. Purchase, or
   2. Conquest.

The deeds express that the object of their cession is, "for the general charge and expenditure,"—a phrase equivalent to the provision of the Constitution respecting customs, "to provide for the common defence and general welfare," &c.

And the acquisitions were generally and originally made by expenditures out of the Treasury from money collected from customs—certainly from a common fund of money in the fisc for common, general and federal ends.

Second—The ends of the powers of Government.

The land power is to "make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory (land) or other property of the United States." The cardinal end of this power is the great object of settlement of territory. The end of the revenue power is the regulation of commerce. Money to pay debts even is secondary to that great end of the customs.

Accordingly, the lands have been so administered as to be sold at a price to cheapen homesteads so low as to yield no revenue; or, where revenue has accumulated from the settlement of territory, to aid the other great end of regulating commerce, reducing taxes, and unfettering trade.

Congress, then, whether we look to the sources of revenue or to the ends of governmental powers, can do no more with land funds than with custom funds. If they may give away the former they may the latter.

Third—There is no surplus from the proceeds of sales of public lands. Debt and credit, cost of purchase, Indian wars, Indian titles, surveys, registering, receiving, pensions, alternate section system, &c., &c., on the one side, and proceeds on the other, and the lands will be found many millions in debt to the customs. Seeing this:

Fourth—In 1836, even Mr. CLAY conceded that there was no surplus from land, and he resorted to deposit, for even he was obliged to concede, also, that a surplus from customs couldn't be distributed, or given absolutely away. The act of 1836 was made perpetual until, or unless the Tariff Compromise of 1832–'33 was disturbed. This condition, unfortunately, carried Mr. CALHOUN. What followed? The Tariff Compromise was immediately broken, and the deposit of the fourth instalment was arrested. Another peremptory provision is, that in case of war, or deficiency, or any emergency happening, the deposit with the States should be returned to the Treasury. War with Mexico, which made the country bleed at purse and every pore, came, and though debt and deficiency run up to 120,000,000, yet not a breath about return of deposits to the Treasury was ever heard of. The unrepealed laws is dead and unexecuted on the statute book, and there the provision still stares us out of countenance, to show its lamentability, that it was in its very inception "in fraudem Constitutionis."

Fifth—Again: In 1836, the supposed surplus was 36 millions; 28 millions were distributed, and before 1840, there was a deficiency under Mr. VAN BUREN of 40 millions, and in 1841, the parties distributed a deficiency, i. e., passed a distribution bill, when there was no surplus in the Treasury, showing that neither surplus nor its want will restrain the abuse of power from making a deficiency itself larger to increased protective tariff, and to defeat both the ends of the revenue power, Free Trade, and of the land power, the settlement of the West.

Sixth—Again: If Congress may so "regulate" lands as to give them away, so they may "other property," for the two stand together in the same category.

Seventh—The system stimulates extravagance and engenders corruption in the States, as well as at Washington. Virginia got $2,195,000 from her three installments in 1836. What became of it? Did it diminish taxation? Futile and foolish was the hope! $243,000 only went to State expenditures, and $1,968,000 went to Bank loans, at a time when the amount was appreciable in comparison with State debts and liabilities; and it infused appropriations so that we ran up our State debt from about 10 or 12 to 25 millions! Taxes increased largely from that very date, and have been steadily rising ever since.

Eighth—The moral argument against looking to the Federal Government for its surplus—and it needs every dollar it now has and more for just and general national objects—the moral argument against calling upon Hercules to put his shoulder to the wheel, is stronger than all the material reasons put together. Teach the people to depend on that mode of making their great works, of lightening their taxburdens, and of paying the public debt, and every nerve of self-reliance and of manly self-exertion will at once be relaxed! You will emasculate your people.

This is but an epitome of what I have not time to elaborate. You have but to go back to the journals of Congress to see my speeches and votes, and my opinions there have not changed, but been fortified by time. Hastily and respectfully, your obedient servant,

HENRY A. WISE.

Interesting from China.

WHOLESALE POISONING BY THE CHINESE—SUCCESS OF THE CHINESE AGAINST THE ENGLISH ETC.

From the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin.

We are indebted to a gentleman of this city for the following interesting circular letter, giving a succinct account of affairs in and about Canton at the latest dates:

MACAO, Wednesday, Jan. 28, 1857.

DEAR SIRS: Referring to our circular of the 13th inst., we have again to record a series of alarms and disasters which, unless soon checked by arrivals of reinforcements or by more vigorous measures of repression than yet shown, must lead to the abandonment by foreigners of the south of China. The Mandarins are now, through their emissaries, employing poison in various forms to effect the destruction of foreigners.

On the 15th instant a Chinese baker, who supplied two-thirds of the foreign inhabitants of Hong Kong with bread, mixed Arsenic with the supply of that day in such an enormous quantity that he defeated his own object, all who took of it being immediately seized with violent sickness: to this circumstance their preservation is owing, as although more than four hundred foreign residents were very ill, and many, including ladies and children, dangerously so, —no deaths have as yet resulted. On an analysis four grains of Arsenic were found in each ounce of bread. On that morning, prior to the delivery of the bread, the baker and his two foremen absconded, the former was immediately pursued to this place, arrested, and carried back to Hong Kong. The two latter escaped. The workmen, some forty in number, are in prison. The baker is partner of the man who effected the murder of the passengers in the Thistle, but had been suffered to continue at Hong Kong after examination before a jury of inquest held upon the body of one of those murdered in that steamer.

Since this wholesale poisoning, other attempts have been made by means of poisoned oranges, which have been sent by boatloads to Hong Kong from the main land; attacks upon individuals have been of frequent occurrence; the steamer Queen was near sharing the fate of the Thistle on her passage to this on 23d inst., but the police having received information of the plan dispatched a steamer in pursuit and brought the Queen back to Hong Kong. Too gangs on board besides their hidden weapons, and their loose sleeves full of fine sand mixed with gunpowder, to dash in the face of the foreigners at the moment of attacking them.

It is with the utmost regret that we have to inform you that the English forces have not only abandoned Whampoa, but have been obliged to retreat from their position in front of Canton, and now occupy a fort on the Macao passage some miles below Canton. This complete triumph for the Chinese, though but temporary as we hope, will greatly stimulate their projects for the extirpation of foreigners, and render yet more difficult and protracted the settlement of the present disastrous state of affairs. Immediately upon their withdrawal from Whampoa, the docks, residences, and property of foreigners there were burnt by the Chinese.

The river between Whampoa and the Bogue is swarming with Chinese gun-boats, which in fleets of 60 to 100 attack the man-of-war steamers on their passage either way, and by their light draught of water elude pursuit. The steamer Sampson, a few days since, was cut up and hulled by one of these fleets near the second bar. Being almost on a level with the water, these boats afford hardly any object for the aim of the steamer's guns, while their own pieces are of great range and well directed.

From the North we learn that the Chinese are throwing up batteries at Amoy, and also at Tientsin, the port of Pekin; this latter step points out clearly that the Imperial Government is preparing to accept the local question at Canton as a national quarrel, and we fear we shall soon hear of outbreaks at Shanghai and Foochow after the report of the success of YEH at Canton reaches Pekin.

The American Consul for Canton has notified American citizens to present to him statements of their losses incurred by the present hostilities.

Advices from Shanghae are to 20th inst. A very active demand and considerable advance in prices of Green Teas is reported, owing to the continued short supplies and apparent confirmation of the teamen's report of there being but a very small quantity to come in for the remainder of the season. Very few teas remained unsold at that date. With the fact of this short supply and the prospect of the war extending to the northern ports, it is unnecessary for us to call your attention to the probability of a great enhancement of value of teas in America and England during the present year. Exchange was at 6s. 9d. Freights to New-York $5 per ton, to England £1 10s. per 50 feet, with an excessive amount of unemployed tonnage. The White Swallow and Endeavor had sailed for New-York. The Carrington was loading and would be dispatched by 26th or 28th inst. The Romance of the Seas was circulated to sail on 5th proximo, "full or not full."

The Golden Racer, from Foochow, for New-York, is a total wreck at the month of the River Min. The Flyaway had been on shore but got off.

The Mail of 10th December, from London, with advices from the United States to end of November, is hourly expected. We remain, your obedient servants,

JAMES PURDON & CO., of Canton.

Our Relations with China.

From the National Intelligencer, April 6.

We have recently more than once had occasion to refer to the quarrel which has arisen between Great Britain and the Chinese, as well as to the negotiations which, it is understood, have been determined upon by the former, with the view of obtaining from the latter certain privileges deemed advantageous not only to the interests of commerce, but also to the better maintenance of diplomatic relations between the two countries.

In the purposes and objects of this movement, as initiated and prosecuted by England, the Government of France is understood to sympathize and cooperate, the alliance between these Powers on the "Chinese Question" being complete; and, as has been already intimated in our columns, it is also believed that our Government has been invited by Great Britain to unite in the "demonstration" which she, in conjunction with France, is now making for the acquisition of new concessions at the hand of the Chinese Emperor—concessions which it is not proposed to extort at the cannon's mouth, but to win by the suasion of a peaceful diplomacy, pleading in the interests of commerce and international polity.

Prominent among the ends which it is hoped to secure is the concession of the privilege, heretofore denied, that the ambassadors of foreign Powers with which China entertains diplomatic intercourse should reside at Pekin, near the Imperial Government to which they are accredited.

As we have already said, it seems to us that this is a legitimate subject of peaceful negotiation, and, tending as such directness of communication necessarily would to a better understanding between China and foreign Governments than can possibly exist under the present system, we see no serious objection to a participation on the part of our Government in the object thus brought to its consideration, provided, of course, it can be done without complicating the United States with the Government of Great Britain in the hostile proceedings which, in the case of the latter, have formed the initiative, if not the basis, of the pending negotiations. In any such "cooperation," even for the specific purpose designated, great caution and discretion would be necessary on our part to avoid the suspicion of officially intermeddling in the domestic affairs of that distant Empire, or of violating our treaty obligations by seeming in the guise of pacific intentions to share in the hostile feelings which precipitated the early stages of the "Chinese Question." As the peaceful relations between our GOVERNMENT and that of China have suffered no interruption, the impropriety, not to say iniquity, of any warlike demonstration on the part of the United States, because a favorable juncture had arisen for the acquisition of some the most desirable, is too apparent to need anything more than the bare statement of the case to determine the judgment which every candid and equitable mind will pronounce in the premises. Our cooperation with Great Britain and France, if undertaken at all, should be strictly confined to objects within the range of a peaceful diplomacy, and should be prosecuted without in any way or to any degree compromiting the strict neutrality of the United States in the late dispute between England and China. And in this spirit it seems to us that any hostile force which our Government may see fit to send to the Chinese waters should be charged only with a pacific mission, and should sedulously avoid the appearance of serving as a menace or a "demonstration" to the Chinese authorities, for which proceeding, as we have received no offence, we could plead no justification, save that of arbitrary power seeking to impose its wishes on a people likely to be influenced rather by their fears than their reason, which how far it may be proper to consider any justification at all we will not undertake to say.

We may venture to add, however, that the difficulties which in all probability will attend a solution of the "Chinese Question" appear to us to demand, alike in the interests of American commerce and of American diplomacy, the presence of an able and skillful Ambassador to represent the Government of the United States on the spot where the negotiations will be conducted by the Envoys of England and France; and it is of hardly less importance that the Commander of our Naval forces in the Chinese waters should be (as the present, so far as we know, is) a man at once of equal energy and discretion.

Terrible Shipwrecks on Lake Michigan.

VESSELS WRECKED—MANY LIVES LOST.

From the Chicago Times, 23d.

Another of the terrible marine disasters which have made the name of Chicago dreadful in the ears of all sailors, occurred before this city yesterday. All day, and a good part of the previous night, a furious gale blew from the northeast, bringing all the lake craft which happened to be this side of Milwaukee to this port for safety.

The scow Cygnet, of Allegan, missed the entrance in attempting to make the harbor and went against the breakwater, where her crew, consisting of three or four men, saved themselves by jumping off. It was a perilous undertaking and narrow escape from death.

The fine schooner Gesine, Capt. GEORGE LUNOX, of Manitowoc, was the next vessel to miss the harbor. She cast anchor directly off the foot of Randolph-street, but commenced dragging towards the breakwater immediately. The sea where she lay was truly terrible in its violence and power. Finding that all efforts to make their anchors hold were unavailing, and with what they regarded as the certain prospect of shipwreck against the dreaded breakwater before them, the crew decided to trust to their yawl boat for escape. The boat was lowered, the men, one by one, got into it, and struck out bravely for the spot indicated.

At this juncture, however, one of the Government life-boats made its appearance within the basin. It was dragged over the pier, launched and quickly manned by seven resolute and manly sailors, all men before the mast.

The crew of the life boat, however, miscalculated the strength of the sea against which they had to contend. They approached the yawl so near that a line was thrown on board and made fast. Then the crews of both boats did their best to reach the angle above mentioned, which was the nearest point of safety. It was soon found to be impracticable; both boats were rapidly falling astern. Then the eight men in the yawl were transferred to the life-boat, and the former was cast loose.

When the crew were abandoning the Gesine, a brig, the name of which we could not learn, was also in distress, not far from the north pier. Her anchors were out, but were totally inadequate to hold her against the sea, which was there even more terrible than where the Gesine lay. She drifted rapidly towards the pier-head, and was at last thrown against it with such violence as, probably, to stave a hole in her bottom. She immediately commenced sinking. Seeing this, five noble-hearted sailors procured a yawl from the steamer Huron, in which they undertook to reach the wreck to save the perishing crew. The boat was swamped in the attempt, and all on board perished! Five of the bravest and best hearts that ever beat in human bosoms went down battling with the elements to save the lives of their fellow-men.

The wreck of the brig, which had now capsized, was carried rapidly by the piers, and nearly disappeared beneath the waves. None were saved of those who were on board. The number we do not know, but probably eight or nine persons went down with the wreck.

One man who went with the crowd on the breakwater when the crew of the Cygnet escaped, was washed off by a wave and drowned. We could not learn his name. With him, it is estimated that at least fifteen persons lost their lives in the disasters before this city yesterday. A more disastrous storm, in this locality, has not occurred for years.

Kansas Matters—The Geary and Sherrard Difficulty.

A letter from the father of SHERRARD appears in the Winchester (Va.) Republican. It purports to correct errors contained in the St. Louis Democrat in relation to that affair. Mr. SHERRARD says:

"That article contains two paragraphs so abounding in wanton and deliberate misrepresentations and perversions of truth, in regard to the facts and circumstances which led to and attended the murder of my son, the late WILLIAM T. SHERRARD, that I had prepared for the press a somewhat detailed exposition of them—taking it for granted that not even the editor of the St. Louis Democrat would be base enough to give Gov. GEARY or any other man as his authority for such a statement without sufficient warrant. It now appears, however, from a letter of "Ion," the Washington correspondent of the Baltimore Sun, dated the 22d inst., and published in that paper of the 24th, that "Gov. GEARY had an interview with Ex-President PIERCE, and utterly disclaimed the authorship of, or any responsibility for, the articles in the St. Louis Democrat," &c.

Under these circumstances, I of course, withhold the publication I had designed to make. In the meantime, however, and while this adjourned question of veracity between Governor GEARY and the St. Louis editor is pending, it may not be amiss to afford the public some light upon the mendacious character of the article alluded to—no matter who is or who is not responsible for its paternity.

In six consecutive lines of the article of the St. Louis paper, we reprinted in the Philadelphia North American and United States Gazette, I find no less than an equal number of separate, distinct, gross and unqualified falsehoods; and so clearly proved to be, without the slightest question or contradiction, by the testimony I refer to—one of the witnesses examined being the chairman of the meeting at which the murder was committed.

This exhibit will enable those who may be permitted to see it elsewhere (for here no such thing is required) to form some idea of the flagrant injustice which has been done to the character of the deceased by the publications in which it has been so grossly and wantonly assailed. Not one in ten of those who have given publicity to those slanders have so far yielded to the claims of truth and justice as to permit their readers to see the conclusive and triumphant refutation of them contained in the proceedings of the public meetings held in Kansas.

The War in Florida.

The following interesting General Order No. 4, dated headquarters of the army, New-York, March 30, 1857, has been issued:

"The General-in-Chief takes pleasure in announcing the satisfaction felt by the Head of the War Department, as well as by himself, in learning, from official reports, the creditable conduct and energy displayed by the troops in various small conflicts with the Indians, as follows, in the order of time:

1. Lieutenant ROBERT C. WOOD, Jr., and his scouting detachment, of the Second Cavalry, pursued an Indian trail for three days, overtook the party near the north fork of the Concho, Texas, Feb. 13, killed three and captured the two survivors, with all the animals and property—a complete success without loss, or serious hurt, to the victors.

2. Sergeant WALTER MCDONALD, with a small detachment of Company D, Second Cavalry, from Camp Verde, Texas, vigorously pursued, and, Feb. 13, successfully attacked a party of hostile Indians—killing four and capturing all their animals. Private MARTIN, of Company D, Second Cavalry, died of wounds then received.

3. Lieut. EDMUND FREEMAN, Fifth Infantry, reconnoitering, with a small party, in the Big Cypress Swamp, near Bowlegs' Town, Florida, was attacked by the Seminoles, March 5, himself, and three of his men severely wounded, and one man killed.

Capt. CARTER L. STEVENSON, 5th Infantry, with his command, called, by express, from Fort Keais, 20 miles distant, came rapidly to the relief of Lieutenant FREEMAN'S party, attacked the enemy, and after a gallant skirmish, put them to flight, with an evident loss to the Indians, the extent of which could not be ascertained, owing to the density of the hammock. The loss of the troops was as follows:

KILLED—Privates Chilton, Company G; McKinn, Company I; and McClusky, Company D, 5th Infantry—3. DIED OF WOUNDS—Private Bohmer, Company G, 5th Infantry—1. WOUNDED—Second Lieut. Edmund Freeman, (in the arm severely); Sergeant Taylor, Company H; Privates Gallagher, Company H; Donnelly, Company K; and Mingle, Company G, 5th Infantry—5.

By command Lieutenant Brevet General SCOTT.
L. THOMAS, Assistant Adjutant General.

Fire and Loss of Life in St. Louis.

From the Republican, March 28.

Yesterday afternoon, about 6½ o'clock, the persons in the immediate vicinity of Main and Chestnut streets were startled by an explosion. It came from the building used as the gun manufactory of T. G. ALBRIGHT, No. 25 Main-street, three doors north of Chestnut. The explosion was so violent in its character that it had scarcely died away before the brick walls on the east and west ends of the building came down with a terrific crash, and the whole building was soon enveloped in flames. The suddenness of the explosion was attended by loss of life and the maiming and burning of several. One man, supposed to be a German, was picked up dead upon the sidewalk immediately in front of the store. Another man by the name of UTETER, was in the store at the time making a purchase of a pistol. He was with some difficulty rescued from the burning mass, his face, hands and portions of his body being badly burned. He is a farmer and a resident of St. Charles County, and was in the store in company with a Mr. MYERS; also a resident of that county, who has not been seen since, and whom, it is feared, was lost.

The southern portion of the building was occupied by E. F. KRAFT & Co., hardware merchants, and was separated from the gun store by a wooden partition. This, of course, was lost in the general wreck. Mr. KRAFT, who was in his store at the time, was badly hurt in the back and other portions of his body by the falling timbers. A drayman who was passing along the street at the time, was thrown off his dray several feet.

The basement story of the building on Commercial street was occupied by SANDGEN & CHARLESVILLE as their Meat Depot, and by MCKAY & HOOD, Produce Dealers, both of which shared in the ruin. In the confusion incident to the excitement produced last night, we were unable to ascertain the loss. The building, however, was not valuable, and the only insurance that we learned was $7,000.

Panic and Panic Makers.

From the United States Economist, April 4.

On the occasion of every turn in the market it is the custom of the "sensation papers" to startle the public with the announcement that the "bottom is just about to fall out," that utter ruin is impending, all railroads are to blow up, all fortunes to blow down, all credit is to perish, all gold to vanish; honor being long since dead, honesty will die completely out, and "darkness be the burier of the dead." Nevertheless, although the fulminations of the Tribune, and the croakings of the Herald breed distrust in the minds of the timid, the headstrong country, as a whole, will prosper with an efficiency past belief. The string with which the Tribune fishes after ruin is "Protection" only. It sits year after year with dogged patience on the bleak theory of prohibition, amid the fluttering of Mother Carey's chickens, bobbing in the dark pool of special favors, with general ruin as a bait; every two or three years, when the money market tightens, it declares it has got a bite, and is about to catch a high tariff. Before its ecstacies subside returning ease deprives it of its bait, but not of its patience. The Herald perseveres in a relentless and remorseless strain of evil predictions, and will clearly be right finally, even if it has to sustain the cry until it is echoed by the last trump (out of cards). As an instance of this admirable perseverance we quote from the Herald of January 8, 1850, seven years ago last January:

"For the past eight months every one has been going ahead as rapidly as his capital and credit would carry him, and lately the impetus has become so great that many have got beyond their own control, and must soon bring up on some lee shore, perfect wrecks. It will be a long time before we shall again have such an easy money market as has existed during the past eight months. The receipts of gold may continue large, and the banks may extend to their utmost limits, but all classes are becoming so extended in their operations that the demand for money is likely to increase full as fast, if not faster, than the supply. The ball has commenced rolling, and, as it progresses, will gain such an impetus that it will be impossible to stop it. We have no way of arriving at the increase of private credits, but it is our impression that the aggregate is at least double what it was six months ago. The demand for money must, therefore, soon be comparatively large."

This "impetus" has been sustained now seven years, and the "lee shore" seems to be a sort of Cape Fly-away, the nearer you approach to it, the deeper the water. The "hail" which "commenced rolling" so long since has kept rolling amidst "war," "short harvests," cholera, Kansas, and Presidential canvass, and a very active and healthy motion it seems to enjoy—it is a sort of perpetual motion, like that of our glorious planet round the color light, presenting, in turn, every side to the vivifying rays. So the country has gone on to increase in numbers and wealth, with a rapidity perfectly astounding, and it is this rapidity of increase which gives color to the croakings; the high figures that represent the sum of the trade, astonish those who do not bear in mind that large imports are the necessary consequence of great production and exports. The Cotton crop, as an instance, is this year worth $200,000,000 cash, against a value of $90,000,000 in 1850. The value exported is $100,000,000 more now than in that year. This is overlooked by the croakers, but when the proceeds of sales return into the country, an enormous amount of ruinous imports is raised, notwithstanding that the exchanges remain under the actual par, even at this season, when the imports are heavy. Since the above prediction of ruin, the country has expended $600,000,000 in railroads, and the value of capital this day in Wall-street is no higher than it was then. All that expended capital, and far more, has been created by renewed and active industry, which is still prospering, although the current of expenditure has subsided, with every prospect of a speedy and large accumulation of capital that must seek some new outlet.

The Stock market has not changed materially during the week. There exists all the elements of a rise in prices, such as improving intrinsic value in the leading railroads, increasing abundance of money at home and abroad, with every indication of an approaching speculative period. The absorption of floating into fixed capital seems to have been checked for the moment, while everywhere the disposition to create new banks and extend credits is greater than ever, particularly in the South and West. All past experience shows that the multiplication of banks in the interior drives capital to the great centres, and fosters stock speculation to an inordinate extent. The elements are now in motion for such a result, and the Stock market in the next three years may

TO THE STOCKHOLDERS OF THE GALENA AND CHICAGO UNION RAILROAD COMPANY.—The Board of Directors of the Galena and Chicago Union Railroad Company passed the following resolution on the 24th inst.:

Resolved, That the balance of the second mortgage bonds of this Company (about $1,000,000) remaining unsold on the 1st day of May next, be offered to the stockholders of the Company until that date, at seventy-five cents on the dollar, each Stockholder being at liberty to subscribe for as many $1,000 bonds as he may choose, without reference to the number of shares he may hold; but should such subscriptions amount in the aggregate to more than the amount of bonds unsold on the 1st day of May next, the same shall be apportioned among the subscribers in as equitable a manner as the circumstances of the case will admit of, reference being had to the amount of stock owned by each on that day.

Subscribers will be required to pay for the bonds awarded them respectively, at the office of Messrs Strachan & Scott, in the City of New-York, or at the office of the Secretary of the Company, in Chicago, Illinois, in drafts on New-York at par, or their equivalent, as follows:

25 per cent. on the 1st day of June next.
25 per cent. on the 20th day of June next.
25 per cent. on the 20th day of July next.
25 per cent. on the 1st day of Sept. next.

Full or partial payments for above bonds may, however, be made in advance of the above times.

Any subscriber may be entitled to receive, from time to time, such number of bonds as the payments made will cover; the coupons and interest on payments to be equitably adjusted, as is customary.

All subscriptions for bonds must be forwarded to the Secretary of the Company, at Chicago, Illinois, and no subscriptions received after the 1st day of May next will be recognized.

The bonds offered in accordance with the foregoing resolution, are the second mortgage sinking fund bonds of this Company, for $1,000 each, with coupons of $35 each attached, payable on the 1st days of May and November of each year at the American Exchange Bank in the City of New-York, and the principal reimbursable on the 1st day of May 1857, at the same place.

Annexed hereto you will find a blank subscription paper, which you are requested to fill with such number of the bonds as you desire, and to return the same to the undersigned, at this office, without delay.

FOR SALE—FOR PERMANENT INVESTMENT, 8-per-cent. City and County Bonds. The undersigned offers for sale the following securities:

$68,000 Hancock County (Ill.) 8-per-cent. Bonds, dated July 1, 1856, and redeemable at the American Exchange Bank, in New-York, July 1, 1876; interest coupons payable annually, on the 1st day of July, $1,000 each.

$24,000 Warsaw City (Ill.) 8-per-cent. Bonds, dated May 1, 1856, and due at the American Exchange Bank, in New-York, May 21, 1876; interest coupons payable Jan. and July 1, $1,000 each.

The above Bonds were issued in conformity with an Act of the State Legislature, authorizing the issue of Bonds to aid in the construction of the Warsaw and Rockford Railroad. The amount of taxable property in the County, for the year 1856, was $5,308,949; taxes, $78,583; population, about 25,000; area in acres, 483,840. The authorized issue by the County is $100,000. The amount of taxable property in the city is $1,000,000; taxes, $14,050; population, 3,400. The authorized issue by the city is $50,000, and no more can be issued, by either the city or county, without an Act by the Legislature, and sanctioned by the people, so that every precaution has been taken to make these Bonds unquestionable, in point of security, and they cannot be repudiated, under any circumstances. Hancock county is the most prosperous in the State, and it is expected that 50 miles of the above railroad, from Warsaw to Oquawka Junction, will be finished and in full operation in sixty days from the present time. I have fully examined the strength of these securities, and I can recommend them to my friends and the public, with the utmost confidence, believing that they will compare with anything in the market, and for a permanent investment, no safer Bonds can be found. For a copy of the act under which these Bonds were issued, and full particulars, apply to

Arrival of the Niagara's Mails.

Her London and Paris Correspondence

THE GENERAL ELECTIONS IN GREAT BRITAIN.

Reported Departure of the Spanish Fleet for Mexico.

Horrible Torture in the Neapolitan Dominions.

British Filibustering in Circassia.

Reported Submission of the Chinese Emperor.

The Niagara's mails from Boston reached this City at an early hour yesterday morning. We publish below our London and Paris correspondence, with some additional news selected from our foreign files.

Many of the elections in Great Britain were appointed to take place on the 28th ult.; but at the time the Niagara left Liverpool nothing definite was known. The London Post, organ of Lord PALMERSTON, says:

"From everything that we see, and from everything that we hear from every portion of the United Kingdom, we come to the conclusion that the prospects of the electoral struggle are in the highest degree favorable."

"The Admiral at Malta has telegraphed to the Secretary of the Admiralty, under the date of March 24, [illegible]:

"From the agent at Suez, March 20, 1857:

"The Bombay brings no news of the Hindostan. The passengers reported that the night before they left Bombay a telegraphic message was received from Calcutta stating that the Emperor of China disapproves the proceedings of the Governor of Canton, and had given orders to conciliate the English. Also, that a battle was fought on the 8th February, about 40 miles from Bushire, between the Bombay and Persian cavalry, which ended in the total rout of the latter, with a loss of 300 killed. The loss of the British was 10 killed and 62 wounded."

The first division of the Spanish fleet for the invasion of Mexico were to leave on the 28th of March. It is reported that the Spanish Government contemplates establishing a submarine telegraph between Cuba and the United States.

The Paris correspondent of the London Times writing on the 25th of March says: At the meeting of the Conference on the Neufchatel question held yesterday much progress was made in business: it was merely for the purpose of taking note of the proposals set forth by M. DE HATZFELDT. The Conference met again to-day, when the Swiss Plenipotentiary, Dr KERN, was at last admitted; he laid before the meeting the counter-propositions of his Government, which, it is said, are secure, differ essentially from those of his colleagues. The public appears quite indifferent to this affair, and I suspect none are more sick of it than the Plenipotentiaries themselves. It may linger on for some days longer, but no one doubts that it will be settled by mutual concessions.

Advices from Konigsberg state that Russia has reduced her customs tariff considerably. The duty on cotton and woolen goods is to be reduced one half. The duty on silk is unchanged. The duty on linen is [illegible].

A telegraphic dispatch from Vienna, dated the 27th ult., states that the Piedmontese Envoy, the Marquis CANTARO DE CEVAS, who is recalled by his Government, is preparing to leave.

"It is announced that Count DE PERSIGNY, the French Ambassador at London, has obtained from the British Government the concession of Longwood, that house occupied by NAPOLEON I. at St. Helena, and of the tomb in which his body was at first deposited. Those places, which are rendered sacred by glorious remembrances, had undergone painful transformations. His Majesty NAPOLEON III. wished to put an end to that profanation, and, thanks to his pious and noble initiative, the spot rendered illustrious by the exile of NAPOLEON I. is about to resume a character worthy of the grand souvenirs it brings to mind."

The Journal de Constantinople announces that a civil war has broken out in Persia. The population of the Northwest Provinces, as well as those of the Southwest, are in open revolt, and the troops marched against Afghanistan have mutinied.

Correspondence of the New-York Daily Times.

LONDON, Friday Evening, March 27, 1857.

England, just now, presents the most extraordinary spectacle ever witnessed in her domestic political history, at least since the Revolution. There is the greatest possible excitement in words and signs, and the greatest apathy in downright reality. Everybody feels it to be a duty to affect the liveliest interest in what is going on, but as nobody knows what is actually going on, the difficulty of keeping up appearances is rather perplexing. The Palmerston-at-any-price delusion has somewhat further subsided; but as no other person's position has improved, he is still Lord paramount, and is likely to remain so for an indefinite time to come. If it were difficult before to say wherein his followers differ from the bulk of the national body opposed to him, it is twice as difficult now; for, with the characteristic effrontry of the man, he has issued an address as full of the usual sounding platitudes about progress as if he were really the successor of WAT TYLER in leading the radical host, as he professed his desire to be when he offered to be the Richard II. of the Commons, on succeeding Lord ABERDEEN two years ago. This is consistent the consummation of all effrontry, as it is not a fortnight ago that he resisted, in the most contemptuous and defiant manner, a proposition for a very small instalment of reform in the shape of an extension of the county franchise; and now he swaggers with the air of a very advanced Liberal indeed, taking the wind out of the sails of all on the same tack who won't accept his convoy. But the multitude accept all, or rather don't reject anything, and on this mingled passive credulity and negative acquiescence, the truly British Minister rides the British lion to the poll.

As yet there have been no elections of any consequence decided, but many will be by 4 o'clock to-morrow. The greatest uncertainty still prevails as to the struggle in the city, where, however, the fortunes of Lord JOHN RUSSELL appear to have improved, although the efforts of his "Liberal" enemies have redoubled. The whole four of these candidates are now united as one man against him whom they were proud beyond utterance only a year or two ago to be permitted to call friend. The pretended reason for this coalition against the person they charge with having coalesced against PALMERSTON is, that the city should be represented by commercial men: an excuse whose hollowness is transparent from the fact that the very parties urging it, were those who entreated Lord PALMERSTON himself, only a few days ago, to be put in nomination for this same constituency. A good deal of what little independence is left in the city has revolted against this hypocrisy, and rallied round Lord JOHN, despite certain recent formidable drawbacks to his popularity. His return is looked for with tolerable certainty, notwithstanding certain statistical evidence that the pledges of a decided majority of the electors who have been canvassed, are hostile to his pretensions. The great difficulty in all these computations, as it is the great anomaly in the situation itself, is, that not one-half of those entitled to vote, will exercise the privilege of so doing. This it is that stamps the artificiality and spuriousness of the whole business. To read the papers and hear certain people talk, you would imagine that every elector in the three Kingdoms would rush to the poll, or cause himself to be carried thither if he couldn't walk. But probably not one-third, certainly not a moiety, will record their suffrages one way or the other. This remark applies not merely to the city electors, but to the whole electoral body generally: and from that single fact you may estimate the collective worthlessness of the agitation wherewith the country is now fretted and irritated, and disconcerted, rather than disturbed.

Until this day or two, it was thought that if Lord JOHN RUSSELL succeeded it must be at the sacrifice of ROTHSCHILD. The latter, however, by the application of means that will readily be understood, though not used in the gross sense of direct bribery, and by the extraordinary exertions of his fellow religionists and Christian friends, has infinitely increased his chances and the probability is that he too will be returned, as well as Lord JOHN. It was imagined that in consequence of the polling day being fixed for to-morrow, Saturday, the Jewish Sabbath, that large numbers of the Hebrew electors would feel bound to abstain from an act that involved the taking of an oath; but the Israelite authorities have declared that there is no profanation in such act, and therefore that the duty of a citizen may be discharged with as clear a conscience to-morrow as on any other day. ROTHSCHILD has grossly propitiated many who considered it useless to vote for him, as he could not sit if elected, that he will retire soon if the law be not altered in his favor, which he expects it will be, because of the very liberal character of the House of Commons now being chosen. There is no warrant whatever for any such supposition.

The new House will be by far the least liberal of the last quarter of a century; and intellectually as decrepid as morally feeble. It will be less favorable to the emancipation of the Jews than the one just expired; but if it were infinitely more so, that will leave untouched the great stumbling-block to the adjustment of this problem—the House of Lords. It has been stated that PALMERSTON will be able to coerce the Peers into tolerance, and certainly his recent influence over that chamber in persuading nine-tenths of the bishops to applaud the massacre of the Chinese is proof of his capacity to effect almost anything. Still it is scarcely conceivable that any amount of solicitation or intimidation will prevail upon bigotry to forego its grasp on its sole surviving victim. Nobody believes, therefore, that the House of Lords will emancipate the Jews; and if Baron ROTHSCHILD keep his word, as it is to be presumed he will, there will be another vacancy in the city representation, and consequently another election, in place of the retiring member, before Christmas.

It was probably to this contingency looming in the future that the Baron owed his tolerably favorable reception at the Guildhall to-day, when the preliminary stage of nomination, previous to to-morrow's polling, was gone through. At this scene there was present, as at every scene of the least political significance there is present, your Ambassador, Mr. DALLAS, who must be laying up materials for a new history of the British Constitution one of these days, so attentive an observer is he of its workings. There was beside him the last imported curiosity, FERUKH KHAN, the Persian Plenipotentiary, who was also a fellow guest with Mr. DALLAS at the inaugural reunion at the Russian Embassy on Wednesday evening. FERUKH's first appearance in English society was this night week, at the Mansion House dinner, whereat Lord CLARENDON made a supremely philo Buchananite oration, describing all things Anglo-American as being in a condition of the most turtle-dove-like amiability and benevolence: and hard upon this announcement comes the preliminary address of your president, giving us visions of paradisical simplicity, such only as had been dreamt of by the founder of New-Harmony, Mr. ROBERT OWEN, who, by the way, it may interest many of your readers to know, is to-day, in his eighty-sixth year, a candidate for the City of London, promising that, if elected, he will immediately bring in a bill to ensure universal happiness and no taxes. The electors, however, hard-hearted, or, rather, hard-headed infidels as they are, turned a deaf ear to the old man eloquent, who, accordingly, has put off the millennium for another six months, by which time it will probably be found to be a day after the fair, as the author has been a day before it all the days of his life.

In the course of the speeches, however, the electors heard things that sounded quite as extravagant, though, by no means, as fantastical as the maunderings of this poor visionary. Lord JOHN RUSSELL intimated pretty plainly that he could a tale unfold as regards those negotiations at Vienna for which he incurred such odium, and which when put in their true light, would very likely cover others with deeper and far more enduring ignominy. The time for disclosure, he said, had not arrived; but meanwhile he afforded a most startling insight into the cabinet motives that had thwarted his, when he said that he had urged CLARENDON to liberate the Circassian shores from Russia, adding that had that been done—why was it not done?—Russia would not now be planning afresh the ruin of Turkey on a far more vulnerable side than that where the previous assault had been made. The peculiar importance of this statement at the present moment, will be apparent to you in the journals by this mail, from which you will see that Russia is bringing her utmost strength to bear upon Circassia, and that Circassia is making a resistance such only as desperation and despair can inspire. We shall now perhaps be favored with some rather piquant particulars as to why the relief of Kars was frustrated; why the Circassian tribes were sneered at; why OMER PASHA was forcibly detained in the Crimea instead of being allowed to prosecute the campaign of the Ingour when he wanted to; and various other mysterious matters over which terrible suspicion hangs in the minds of all who dare to think of these things, and to compare results with what must have been premeditated causes.

Another remarkable and astonishing piece of intelligence that has come to light during the present communicativeness of candidates with constituents, is that told by Mr. SYDNEY HERBERT. This gentleman, you will remember, was Secretary of War during the time the question was so continuously asked, "Why spare Odessa?" He tells us now that, pacifically disposed though he was, he not only felt no disposition to spare it, but actually signed the order for its bombardment. This order was countermanded by whom? Lord PALMERSTON! Add these facts to the one formerly mentioned by COBDEN, that KOSSUTH refused, on landing in England, to go near PALMERSTON, though pressingly invited, and you will not be surprised to hear that the opinion is rapidly spreading as to the noble Viscount not being quite so transcendent a patriot as his admirers of the Wilkoff class of eulogists would have the world believe, and as the artifices of his press this very day endeavor to establish.

For the first time in the history of London diurnal journalism, at least within living memory, a paper of this morning, assuming to be both the special organ of the Premier and the mouth-piece par excellence of the fashionable world, gives a wretched wood engraving of a human figure intended to represent a Neapolitan suffering under a new instrument of torture used by the King of Naples on political prisoners, who won't keep a civil tongue in their heads while being punished by their jailor. The meaning of this is to show how ardent a friend of the oppressed is the noble lord who thus holds up to execration the barbarous Bourbon as he does the barbarous YEH! If this sort of thing were done in the land of stump orators, we know what would be thought of it, or at least what English writers on American manners would endeavor to have the enlightened British public think of it. But occurring in this focus of all civilization and chivalry, it only remains to receive it with admiration for its morality and wonderment at its ingenuity.

It is needless to say that pending the elections, of which there will not be an end for nearly a fortnight yet, nothing is thought of here except what is calculated either to be advantageous or detrimental at the hustings. The only exception is the shocking exposé that follows, day after day, as to the fallacious basis of the character of our commercial magnates, and of the great enterprises they are identified with. One after another we have the reputation of Companies of the greatest apparent strength and integrity swept away, and the cry is what next?—a question few men can answer either negatively or positively, after the examples of the last few weeks, saying nothing of the more flagitious exposures of a somewhat earlier date.

The general treaty for the redemption of the Sound Dues underwent some modifications before its final conclusion, the chief being an article by which Denmark agrees to make arrangement with Sweden for the maintenance of the existing lights and beacons on the Swedish and Norwegian coasts, which contribute to the safety of the passage through the Cattegat and the Sound. Great Britain, France, Belgium, Hanover, the Hanseatic Towns, Mecklenberg, Oldenburg, Prussia, Russia, Sweden, Holland and Austria, have acceded to the terms of capitalization; and hopes are said to be entertained at Copenhagen that the United States, now that all the European States have done so, will not any longer refuse to acknowledge the principle upon which Denmark claims the payment of these Dues, or compensation for their abandonment. Dispatches on this subject having been exchanged at Washington early in February, it is thought not impossible that a satisfactory answer might be received by the Danish Government before the expiration of the term appointed by the Government of the United States for the termination of its treaty with Denmark. The Board of Trade has notified to the owners and masters of British vessels that, during the provisional state of things in the Sound, they will have to send their papers on shore, or to the guard-ship, accompanied by a signed declaration, undertaking, in the event of the treaty engagements not being fulfilled, to pay the amount of dues with which, according to their papers, they may be chargeable for the vessel and cargo.

INTERESTING FROM FRANCE.

The French Press on Mr. Buchanan's Inaugural—Emeute at the Polytechnic—Attacks on the Corruptions of the Imperial Court, by Father Ventura—Curious Discovery.

Correspondence of the New-York Daily Times:

PARIS, Thursday, March 26, 1857.

The appreciations of Mr. BUCHANAN's message by the Paris journals will, I am sure, amuse you. The Debats, for example, that excessively respectable, legitimist, academic sheet, returns upon the subject in a second "leader" with evident perplexity of mind. It regrets that Mr. BUCHANAN, the most talented occupant of the Presidential chair for the last twenty years, should have marked out no higher for rôle himself than that of following in the footsteps of his feeble predecessor. It is astonished that so distinguished a man should have covered up his greatness in a few banalités and common-places, which only assured the country that he was satisfied with the policy of Mr. PIERCE, and would endeavor to continue in the same track. But in the second article, the Debats, while condemning in a forcible way Mr. BUCHANAN's treatment of the Slavery question, rallies to the opinion of the London Times, that it was precisely because he was a great man that he said nothing in his message—after the style of the Queen's speech!

La Presse, through the pen of its American editor, M. GAILLARDET, gives a glowing description of the Inauguration, and finds nothing but eulogiums for the message. In speaking of the ceremony at the point where the new President takes the oath, the Presse says: "Whilst Mr. BUCHANAN pronounced this formula, of a poetic simplicity, all the spectators uncovered themselves and held their right hand extended as long as the President's, as if they wished, in associating themselves to his attitude to associate themselves in his pledge of devotion to the country! After this grand spectacle, the President elect was conducted to the door of the White House by the retiring President, who saluted him, shook him by the hand and withdrew." In these few lines, M. GAILLARDET has condensed a fund of thought for the monarch-ridden people of Europe.

Le Pays, Journal de l'Empire, which is attacked with the pitcable toquade of wishing to make a position as an enemy of republicanism, seizes the occasion of this message to deal out a phillipic of the first force, directed more against the country than the author of the message. The Pays picks up the word decadence, dropped by Mr. BUCHANAN, by implication, and turns it against the country with a frightful acerbity of tone. It concedes to Mr. BUCHANAN greatness, and claims that this very greatness enabled him to see, what other of his countrymen did not know, that the country had entered a state of decadence! His warnings against a "cupidity without check, and an ambition without conscience," to use the language of the Pays, proves that Mr. BUCHANAN and this journal are of accord, that the decadence of the United States has commenced!

The Siècle, which claims the rank of the leading Republican paper, a position it only maintains in name in order to profit by a revolution, commences its "leader" thus: "Our admiration, we might say our attachment, for the United States, (a stereotyped phrase that has passed into an unmeaning commonplace in M. LEMARCHE's mouth,) imposes upon us more than any other, (a self-imposed duty which I contest,) the obligation of combatting all that, with this great people and this great Government, tends to the extension of Slavery, that spot on the sun of a liberty which ought to spread its rays over the world. We feel, therefore, some regret, but no hesitation, in speaking our opinion, all our opinion, on the inaugural message of Mr. BUCHANAN." Whereupon M. LEMARCHE indulges in a very just criticism on the President's Slavery doctrines, treating them as insincere, since he must know that he is dealing with an institution that is going to die.

M. LEMARCHE then condemns the manner in which Mr. BUCHANAN promises to imitate the policy of his feeble predecessor, and denounces him even as an unfortunate agitator, since the first, in his course of error declared boldly his convictions, while the second follows him timidly. He then picks up the word encore, dropped by Mr. BUCHANAN, thus: "Convinced that I owe my election to the inherent love of the Constitution which 'still' animates the hearts of the American people." M. LEMARCHE asks: "Would Mr. BUCHANAN employ this word "still" if he thought the American people were animated by a regard for the Federal Constitution that was not threatened with a change?

M. LEMARCHE then denounces with perfect justice the spectacle of a President standing on the portico of the capitol, and arguing the dollar and cent value of the Union. It would have been more dignified to have denounced such calculations only and left their argument to brawling politicians.

Mr. BUCHANAN speaks of efforts to preserve the Union till the benefits of its civil and religious liberty shall be efficaciously distributed through the world. M. LEMARCHE desires to know whether the President thinks that the example of the United States would be less efficacious to the world if Slavery was restricted to the Territories where the labor of the Caucasian race is not possible, instead of being extended, by an unqualifiable interest, to climates where free labor is not only possible, but constantly employed?

M. LEMARCHE approves his programme of foreign policy. He cannot, however, let pass Mr. BUCHANAN's declaration: "The maxim of our policy since the days of WASHINGTON, has been to avoid all entangling alliances," without a remark. Reduced to these terms, he says the theory has nothing grandoise, and WASHINGTON might very well fall to recognise his thought.

M. LEMARCHE, and indeed the whole French press, do not hesitate to express their great pleasure at the appointment of Gen. CASS, whom they recognize as an old and sincere friend of France. (Vide The Court of Louis Phillippe, by LEWIS CASS.)

The Univers, politico Catholic journal, concludes an article, inspired by the general subject of the message, in the following remarkable words: "The present state of society in America would inspire us with alarm, did not the progress of the Catholic religion give us confidence in the future. We repeat once more what we have often said: it belongs neither to England nor to the United States to constitute themselves judges of the Governments and nations of Italy. At Naples and at Rome there exists an amount of morality, security, religion, prosperity and comfort which puts London and New-York to shame." After that il faut tirer l'échelle!

One hundred and twenty-five students of the Polytechnic School, embracing the entire second year's class, were discharged last week. The following is the history of this grave affair: It is a custom among the students, when they wish to come to an understanding upon any measure which concerns them all, to pass a paper surreptitiously through the various class-rooms to be signed, yes or no. Although prohibited by the rules, this custom has always been in use. Last week it was a question in the class whether or not they should select and put forward themselves the names of the twenty-five who were to be selected for promotion. M. BUFFA, filling the post of Adjutant, a man much disliked by the cadets for his severity, succeeded by force, after several fruitless attempts, in seizing one of these secret circulars. The Major, (the first cadet by right of examination, the ordinary medium of communication between the class and the administration,) wounded at the violent manner in which M. BUFFA had seized the document, went to make a reclamation, and received four days' of prison. The persons named in the circular for promotion were "consigned."

This was followed by a tumult, and several consignments. The cadets determined to give a lesson to the too zealous M. BUFFA; they agreed to cut off his moustaches, a project which was afterwards abandoned for fear of wounding him with the scissors. At 10 o'clock at night, of Saturday the 14th, after the reveille, each cadet prepared his cotton night cap, took off the number and practised two eye holes in the sides. Then when the adjutant entered, they drew these masks over their faces, attacked him, threw him down, and applied to him a species of pommeling called in French brimer. M. BUFFA soon got up, however, and seizing one of the students violently, received from the others two or three blows of the fist, without gravity.

The next day Gen. EBLE, commandant of the school, opened an inquest. He ordered each one of the hundred and twenty-five cadets composing the class, to be introduced separately, and so managed his interrogatories as to throw the boys off their guard, and fifteen of the number declared that they had not been concerned in the affair and were dismissed. But soon learning the nature of the trap that had been laid for them, these fifteen declared themselves also responsible, and reclaimed an equal share of the punishment, if a punishment were to be prooounced. On Monday the whole class was discharged, and each one ordered to return, under the constraint of an imperative order to return to the bosom of his family, no matter in what part of France situated. Ten alone were excepted from the discharge. Of these ten two were in the hospital at the time of the affair, four in the police room, and four in the prison.

Thus is the future of a hundred and twenty-five young men destroyed, unless the Minister of War shall see fit to return upon the decision of the administration of the school, and restore the class to their places. If they had not used the masks to conceal their faces, the affair would have possessed no gravity, since students may always be excused for taking libertice with too harsh a tutor or surveillant. When a chastisement is inflicted openly, it takes the character of an honest conviction of having suffered wrong; but the masks completely compromise this position.

FATHER VENTURA.

Between HUME and the Père VENTURA, the Tuileries must have its complement of spiritual things. This eminent Catholic orator, called from Rome to preach in the Tuileries during Lent, is now at his fourth sermon. The boldness with which this man attacks the corruptions of the day, and especially corruptions in high places, has given him an immense European reputation. The Emperor, in calling him to Paris, signified his intention to give him full liberty of speech, and it appears that he has made good use of the privilege. He has not even spared the Court—(God knows how much room he had for denunciations)—and on one occasion, surpassing others in the eccentricity of his language, he declared that an angel could not descend from heaven to earth and reascend without becoming soiled. He dwells largely upon the spirit of speculation which is devouring the morals of the country, and even ventures to denounce the Government that gives them encouragement. The Italian preacher does not, of course, in his condemnations of the corruptions of the Courts into which he is called, name directly the persons or the Court to whom he addresses himself; etiquette would forbid it. But he makes himself none the less perfectly understood.

A SINGULAR DISCOVERY.

In 1852, a few grains of wheat were discovered in the tombs of some mummies found in the south of France, supposed to have been two thousand years old. These grains of Egyptian wheat were planted, and produced, to the surprise of every one, 1,900 to 1! The Government took the affair in hand, and consigned the management of it to the farmers of the Government farm at Rambouillet. The result has been most astonishing. Each year the product has been magnified in such an immense proportion over the preceding year, that the Minister of Agriculture is now enabled to distribute over France a large quantity of this wheat to each of the departments gratuitously, with instructions from the Government farm as to the best mode of cultivation. At a late meeting of the Academy of Sciences, the Baron na MENNEVILLE presented several stocks of this regenerated Egyptian wheat which were six feet high and bur each several fine ears. A French lady explained in my hearing the other day, this great multiplying power of the Egyptian wheat by the long rest it had had! It is a great and important discovery for the study o agriculturists.

Since Saturday last, Mr. SUMNER, United States Senator from Massachusetts, has been daily seen promenading our Boulevards, looking very well after his voyage across the Ocean. MALAKOFF.

From the London Times, March 26.

By a coincidence of occasions the two great Anglo-Saxon communities of the world will in the space of a single month have laid the foundations of new Governments for their respective countries. In America these alternations of policy proceed according to fixed laws, and with the regularity of a machine. After four years of office the President and Administration of the United States are absolved from their duties on the 4th of March, and as the clock strikes 12 on that day the existing Government gives place to another. In England the course of affairs is different. The Usher of the Black Rod can, indeed, convey to our legislative body in a few brief words the tidings that dispersion awaits them, but the event, except that it must occur once in seven years, is not assigned to any fixed season or period. It is accident alone which on this occasion has brought the constitutional solemnities of the two countries into signal and striking contrast, nor do we think that, upon temperate reflection, a comparison of the rival institutions will leave us much to repine at on this side of the Atantic.

The American Congress, according to pure Democratic theory, may certainly appear to be more absolutely a creation of the people than the British House of Commons, for the numbers of a constituency determine the numbers of its representatives, votes are taken by ballot, and members are paid. We do not pretend, indeed, to doubt that Congress does give an effective representation of American opinion, but Congress is not the only power in the State established by popular election. The President himself, the head of the Administration, is also appointed in the polling-booths of the country, and we have recently witnessed the thoroughly electioneering character of which this mighty contest partakes. The President of the United States does, beyond all question, personify the choice of the people, but the suffrages are given without power of revocation, and they commit the great constituency of the Union for four years together, on many most important points, to the guidance and policy of a single man. An American Administration cannot, except by a solemn and express renewal of public confidence, last longer than four years; but four years, as regards its controlling authority, it must last, whatever may be its mistakes, its incompetence, or its perversity; nor is any opportunity afforded to the public of reconsidering its resolution. There is no "appeal to the country," no consultation of "the constituencies," no "want of confidence vote" practicable. At the appointed period, indeed, the constitutional fabric will be submitted to the people for reconstruction, but until that hour arrives the electoral decision cannot be rescinded. President PIERCE might, if he had so pleased, have dismembered or destroyed the relations of the Union with any State in the universe, against all the opinions of his constituents, but until the 4th of this month his authority could not be impeached nor his policy effectually controlled. The attributes and power of this great appointment are derived, it is true, in the first instance, from the voice of the whole community, but when the community has spoken the word the vow is irrevocable, and for a certain term of years the President and the people are indissolubly joined together.

With these institutions compare our own. The office of Prime Minister depends virtually upon the votes of Parliament, nor could it be retained without the confidence of the House of Commons; but from this House of Commons their lies at any time an appeal to the constituencies, and Lord PALMERSTON is at this moment challenging the judgment of the country as completely as Mr. BUCHANAN did last Autumn. If the verdict of the constituencies proves to be such as there is every reason to anticipate, his Lordship as the First Minister of the Crown, will represent the decision of the electors with as much faithfulness as the American President. Here, however, the resemblance ends, and the contrast—as we think to the advantage of England—will be found to begin. Not only do our institutions provide other powers to ballast and trim the vessel of the State when careering under the impulse of popular will, but this will, itself, is open at all times to correction or revocation. Not only can the House of Commons be reconstituted, but even without reconstitution, and while composed of the same elements, it can withdraw, at brief notice, that confidence on which the Administration relies. It is under no necessity of waiting for a fixed period, or of enduring the miseries of an ill-starred union till the appointed hour of divorce and release. A vote of censure or want of confidence can be moved by any member in the House and, if carried, will subvert the Government. Such a creature as a "despotic" Minister exists, as far as this country is concerned, only in the imagination of Mr. COBDEN. Applied to American institutions, the phrase might, indeed, be more justifiable, for there the country stands inextricably to its first vote; but in England the offices of Government are always held during pleasure. The very Parliament which Lord PALMERSTON will have to meet, however his popularity might have influenced the elections, could abandon him as soon as it was formed: and, if there were good reason for the proceeding, the opinion of the country would support it. The approbation justly yielded to the Premier's past services gives him no kind of impunity or irresponsibility for the future. His security does not extend to his forthcoming policy, except in so far as that policy shall continue to receive public approval. The country will not be tied or bound to him in any way whatever. He cannot commit us to any unpopular or unpatriotic course. If, instead of despatching such reinforcements to China as will place our countrymen beyond risk of harm, and establish our relations with the Chinese on a safe and respectable footing, he were to adopt the alternative he has himself described, and surrender the honor of England to those truculent Barbarians, Parliament would terminate his Administration without waiting for the 4th of March, 1861. The country is answering the appeal of the Government, not as exempting that Government from future accountability, or as voting it a definite lease of power, but simply as acknowledging services rendered, and accepting it as a pledge for more. We can only augur the future from the past. Lord PALMERSTON and his colleagues have earned the approval of the country by what they have done, and it is not only in the hope, but, what is far more important, on the notorious condition, that their policy shall continue to be satisfactory, that the suffrages of the constituencies, as we confidently expect, will confirm them in power.

We cannot but consider that in the balance of those institutions the scale of British freedom preponderates, and we believe, indeed, notwithstanding the demonstrations to the contrary which might be offered on paper, that we are in the enjoyment of a much more genuine political liberty than our Transatlantic kinsmen. They stand now committed, as regards their foreign policy, to Mr. BUCHANAN—a man of high abilities, no doubt, and unquestionably the President of their own free choice; but, though they chose him, they must also keep him, whereas no electoral judgment, however strongly pronounced, will commit us to Lord PALMERSTON any further than as regards the approval of his past acts. If his foreign policy should become pusillanimous or perilous, weak or wanton, "turbulent" or "aggressive," in the eyes of the Legislature, he will lose the support at once on which he leans, and the impending verdict of the constituencies will not avail him one jot. If he should point, under such circumstances, to the suffrages this week recorded in favor of his policy, he would be promptly told that the favor in question, to be worth anything must be continuous, and that, whatever willingness to support him might have been entertained by a Parliament at its first assembling, the confidence of that body could only be retained by the same merits which acquired it. Lord PALMERSTON and his colleagues have, in our opinion, deserved the approbation of the constituencies, and we believe they will obtain it, but they will not be taken for better or worse for four years to come.

The Threatened War Between Spain and Mexico.

ALTERATION IN THE SPANISH PLACE OF CAMPAIGN—AN INVADING FORCE TO BE LANDED.

A Madrid letter of March 21, in the Pays, states that the Mexican affair appears to be entering on a new phase. It seems certain that even in the case of an arrangement being made the Spanish squadron will land a force, which will occupy a point on the Mexican territory until the execution of whatever may be agreed to be done. This force will protect Spanish subjects, whom, it is alleged, the Mexican Government is not in a condition to protect on account of the state of anarchy in which the country now is.

The Madrid correspondent of the London Post, writing on the 21st of March, says:

"Nothing further has transpired as to the intentions of the Government with respect to Mexico. The agent of that Republic has not yet arrived in Madrid, but he may be expected this evening, as by telegraph we have heard of his departure from Paris. Although Señor LAFRAGUA will not be received officially, the Government will hear what he has to say. It is doubtful if any large military force will be dispatched to Mexico. In the first instance Tampico and San Juan will be taken possession of by the squadron, and held until the assassins are punished by the Mexican Government, indemnity granted to the families of the victims, and the expenses of the war paid. By such cautious but energetic measures the Government will sustain the dignity of the nation without incurring the risks of a campaign on shore and a large attendant outlay they can ill afford."

A telegraphic dispatch states that the first division of the Spanish squadron for Mexico was expected to weigh anchor for the Havana on the 28th.

INVENTION OF A HORRIBLE INSTRUMENT OF TORTURE—EXPERIMENTS ON PRISONERS.

Turin (March 21) Correspondence of the London Times.

His Majesty of the Two Sicilies has recently introduced a new luxury into his prison discipline in addition to the many already existing. It is called a cap of silence, (cuffia di silenzio,) and both for the particular purpose for which it is ostensibly applied, and as an instrument of torture generally, it may, perhaps, be considered superior in refinement to the celebrated "iron mask" or any of the engines of antiquity. The invention is due to Signor BAIONA, Inspector of Police at Palermo, and it appears to have been so highly approved by the King of Naples that he immediately decorated the talented and philanthropic gentleman with the order of FRANCIS I.

This cap, or cuffia, consists of a circular band of steel, passing around the head just above the eyes, with a semicircular band of the same material connecting it over the top of the head from ear to ear; attached to this superstructure is a chin strap of steel wire, growing broader towards the bottom, so as to confine the lower jaw completely, and make it utterly impossible to articulate when the bands on the head are properly screwed up; and to complete the adjustment there is a strap of leather with a buckle attached to the chin strap, which passes round the back of the neck, just below the ears, and keeps the latter firm in its place. It is said that the first experiments made with this novel instrument of torture were on two persons called LO-RE and DE MEDICI, and that the former suffered so much from it that he remained senseless for some time, and a gaoler who saw him, believing the man to be dying, ran and fetched a doctor and a priest without asking Signor BAIONA's permission. When the doctor and priest arrived, Signor BAIONA consented to allow the cap to be removed from the unfortunate prisoner, who was at length restored to life, after a copious bleeding and other remedies; but he ordered a punishment of 15 blows of a stick to the gaoler, in order to check his over zealous charity in future.

THE RUMORED ARRANGEMENT BETWEEN NAPLES AND THE WESTERN POWERS.

Naples (March 19) Correspondence of the London Times.

For several days the report has been circulating on the Exchange and in the city that the difficulties between the allied Powers and the Government of the Two Sicilies were, if not arranged, at least on the point of being so. All that I know for certain is this, that a communication was made, directly or indirectly, by this Government to the effect that it was ready to consent to a pourparler on a given basis. This communication would arrive, it was expected, in Paris last Saturday night. The basis I have heard mentioned is an enlargement of the Argentine treaty, —that is to say, a wider system of transportation is to be adopted, which is to be baptized "an amnesty," and to His Majesty is to come forth clear from his present embarrassment. It is asserted by those who are supposed to be well informed, that the King begins to feel the extreme isolation of his position, and would willingly enter again into the comity of nations, but if it is by such a way as is now suggested it will reflect great dishonor on those who have withdrawn from his friendship and leave all the elements of discontent and strife as active as ever, because not a single, social or political evil will have been removed.

The Diplomatic Rupture between Austria and Piedmont.

OFFICIAL DISPATCH FROM AUSTRIA.

The Austrian Government, in recalling its representatives from Turin, addressed a circular dispatch, setting forth the reasons by which it is guided, to its agents at the European Courts. A letter from Berlin, published by the Nord, contains a summary of the dispatch on this subject.

According to this summary, the Cabinet of Vienna is not only dissatisfied with Count CAVOUR's reply to its complaints of the Piedmontese press, and of the tolerance with which these attacks are treated by the Sardinian Government, but it sees a new offence in the language used by that Government on the occasion of the debates which have taken place relative to the fortifications of Alessandria.

The dispatch adds, that "the Austrian Government has become convinced that Piedmont seeks to place itself at the head of the revolutionary movement in Italy—a movement of which the success would be the destruction of the Austrian denomination in Italy. Piedmont pursues, then, a policy which not only tends to disturb social order in Italy, but even to totally change the European political system established by the treaties of Vienna."

In presence of these facts, Austria deems that her dignity will no longer permit her to maintain official relations with Sardinia. Nevertheless, Count BUOL, in informing the foreign courts of the step which Austria has determined to take, declares formally that this measure will not be followed by others of a more hostile character, and that in any event Austria will English Filibustering in Circassia.

The Presse d'Orient, the organ of the French Embassy at Constantinople, of the 19th instant publishes the following narrative of the cruise of the Kangaroo, which forms now, on the demand of the Russian Embassy, the subject of official inquiry at Constantinople:—

On the 14th of February the English [illegible] steamer Kangaroo left Constantinople for Trebisonde and the Turkish coast of the Black Sea. This vessel had been repeatedly out on the same service before, and nothing indicated that on this occasion her voyage had any other object than that of goods and passengers to the line of Turkish ports on the Black Sea. In consequence of a secret arrangement, however, she had to convey from a point [illegible] to a hundred and twenty Hungarian and Polish officers and soldiers to the coast of Abasia (that portion of the coast leading to the mountain districts of the independent Circassians) One of them, Mr. [illegible], who had taken part in the campaign of [illegible], had been invited, according to the statement of the Hungarian journals, by the Circassians, to take the command of their troops. Though Colonel MEHEMED had been in the Ottoman army during the war, he, as a foreigner, never was placed on the Turkish army list.

The Kangaroo, while sailing down the Bosphorus, put in at Koulell, where she took on board a number of chests which had been made ready on board, and which contained, as is said, arms and ammunition.

When she arrived at Samsoun, or at Sinope, Captain Keeggs landed all the passengers he had taken to convey to Trebisonde, but reimbursing them their whole passage-money.

The Kangaroo then sailed for the coast of Abasia. It is said that the point for which she steered was Soudan. But finding this well watched, she regained the open sea, and, during a fine night, succeeded in landing her military passengers and cargo on some unobserved spot of the coast. It is said that the landing took place either in the Bay of Pitsounda, or that of Pitsonts. The latter place formed, at all events, the centre of the smuggling traffic in female slaves, from the time the Russians attempted to put a stop to it.

The Kangaroo set sail upon the same night; but the two Russian gunboats had discovered her, and gave chase. By putting on full steam she succeeded in escaping. The gunboats gave repeated signals, which, however, were not attended to, and at last one of them fired, but without effect.

The Kangaroo returned on Monday, at 8 o'clock in the morning, to Constantinople.

The Commission which the Pope has nominated, on the demand of Russia, to inquire into this affair, consists of ILIZA BEY, formerly Minister Plenipotentiary, TUFFIK PASHA, and two Colonels of the staff.

The General of Brigade, FERHAD PASHA, has been imprisoned in consequence of the first results of the inquiry.

Yesterday other officers, who are in the habit of communicating with MEHLMED BEY, were arrested; but nearly all of them were set at liberty this morning.

THE CORONER CONTROVERSY.

Investigation Continued Before Judge Daly.

EXAMINATION OF MR. A. F. WARBURTON AND MRS. DR. BUSCH.

The investigation into the charges preferred by [illegible] against Coroner Connery was continued before Judge Daly, in the Common Pleas Court room on Saturday. Before any testimony had been taken, the counsel for the prosecution, Mr. Jordan, objected to a continuation of the proceedings unless the District Attorney or his assistant, Mr. Sedgwick, were present to conduct it for the prosecution. The Judge permitted Mr. Clinton to conduct the case on Thursday last under the impression that it would be necessary for that day; but as Mr. Clinton was again absent, and the District Attorney absent, he must insist on an objection, in which he was sustained by the Counselor.

Mr. Clinton did not desire to conduct the case. He had sent for the Assistant District Attorney, desiring his presence.

Mr. Jordan wished to make the objection broader. He may would object to any one conducting the case for the prosecution except the District Attorney.

Mr. Clinton had no desire to do the duty of the District Attorney, and particularly in this case. He considered for the District Attorney's assistant, and he hoped proceedings would be delayed until he should arrive.

Soon afterwards Mr. Sedgewick appeared, and after some conversation counsel for the Coroner consented to waive their objection for the day, and allow Mr. Clinton to go on, with the understanding that either the District Attorney or his Assistant, should be present and conduct the investigation in future.

Mr. A. F. Warburton was the first witness called:

Q.—What is your occupation? A.—Short-hand writer and reporter.

Q.—Were you not present at the inquest held by Coroner Connery in February last, to inquire into the cause of the death of Harvey Burdell? A.—I was.

Q.—Were you present when the witness, Mary Donohue, gave her testimony upon that inquest? A.—I was.

Mr. Clinton here stated that he was examining under charge second, beginning with specification first.

Mr. Jordan objected. They admitted that the Coroner used the phrase, "You carry your tail behind you," to witness Mary Donohue; and in his answer, he had explained that it was not used out of disrespect to the witness, nor from levity; it was used as a compliment to her integrity—she being an Irish girl and familiar with the story of the Irishman who lost his cow, and who could only say, in describing her, that she was a very honest cow and carried her tail behind her. On that story some doggerel had been written that was well known all over Ireland. One verse was:

"Tiddy Brady lost his cow,
He didn't know where to find her,
And the only mark he had on her, was
She carried her tail behind her."

The Judge allowed Mr. Clinton to go on.

Q.—Can you state what was said, if anything, by the Coroner to the witness, Mary Donohue, as to her carrying her tail behind her? Give the words of the Coroner as near as you can. All he said, and why he said it, if you know why he did say it.

[Objected to on the ground that the expression already to be offensive is admitted in the answer. Objection overruled and exception taken.]

A.—At one portion of Mary Donohue's testimony, while the Coroner was waiting her answer, the Coroner said: "I knew that you carried your tail behind you, by gracious, Mary;" the word "Mary" may have come in last, or after the first two words; it may have been "I knew, Mary," &c.; those are the words to the best I can recollect them; as to the reason why he said it, I, of course, cannot answer; I could only form my own surmises.

Q.—Did you take any short-hand notes at the time?

A.—I did.

Q.—Is your recollection of the Coroner's language refreshed by any means, and if so, what?

[Objected to on the ground that the short-hand notes should be produced, and objection sustained.]

Q.—Were you present at that inquest, when the witness, Cyprian Stevens, was examined by the Coroner? A.—I was present when a Mr. Stevens, from Brooklyn, was examined; he gave Mercer-street as his residence.

Q.—Did you hear the Coroner ask Mr. Stevens, when the latter was upon the stand as a witness, the question: "Was Mrs. Cunningham in the room at the time?" If so, state what was said thereafter by the Coroner, if you recollect. [Objected to—objection overruled.] A.—I can't recollect such a question as distinctly in the course of such a long examination; I only remember distinctly such expressions as struck me as being peculiar; if I had more of the context I might recollect.

Q.—What were the remarks which struck you as peculiar in the examination of Mr. Stevens? A.—Mr. Stevens was testifying to a conversation he had with Mrs. Cunningham, in which she, Mrs. Cunningham, had made charges against his wife and Dr. Burdell; Mr. Stevens said Mrs. Cunningham said she looked through the glass door and saw some improper liberties taken by Dr. Burdell with his, Mr. Stevens' wife; at that stage of the examination, the Coroner remarked, "I suppose she was looking through the glass, or door, to have a peep at the elephant," or words to that effect. Again, somewhere in the same connection, there was mention made of sores on Mrs. Stevens' legs, and the Coroner said the scratches in the glass must have been pretty large to see the sores; I understood him to mean scratches on the door glass.

Q.—Were you present when the witness, John T [illegible] of Brooklyn, was examined? A.—I was.

Q.—Did you hear that witness state, in answer to the Coroner, what was his (the witness') occupation? A.—I did.

Q.—What words did that witness use—If you recollect? A.—They were peculiar, and raised a laugh at the time; he said "I am a distiller," then he paused, and afterwards added, in a laughing tone, "or a manufacturer of liquid death."

Q.—What did the Coroner do or say, if anything, immediately thereafter? A.—He wrote down his answer. We were all amused at it at the time. And he repeated it, adding, I think, "I will put that down for the benefit of the teetotal society."

Q.—Can you describe the manner of the Coroner when he repeated the answer of the witness—a manufacturer of liquid death? [Objected to and question withdrawn.]

Mr. Jordan would like to know whether the Coroner had not the same right to be amused as any other person.

Witness—It is but fair to add that the manner of the witness was so exceedingly eccentric as to amuse any one.

Q.—Was anything said by the Coroner to this witness as to whether he (the witness) gave her (Mrs. Burdell or Mrs. Cunningham) the wink, if so, what was the form of the question? A.—I recollect something to that effect, which occurred in this way: Hildreth was testifying as to an appointment made by a young man, with Mrs. Cunningham, before she was married, I don't know what her maiden name was, in Brooklyn. The signal between them was to have been the waving of a handkerchief, I believe. Some one else heard of it, went there in his place, gave the signal, and, I believe, winked at her. That was the purport of the story, and somewhere in that connection the Coroner said "did you never give her the wink yourself," or something of that kind. It was a kind of side remark as he was writing down the testimony.

Cross-examination by Mr. Jordan—Q.—Mr. Warburton, were you present when a woman called Hannah, the cook, was examined? A.—I was.

Q.—Did you take notes of the examination? A.—I did.

Q.—Did you report the whole of her examination? A.—I took notes of it; the whole of her examination which took place on the day I was there; I don't know whether she was examined at any other time or not.

Q.—Did the Coroner say anything to her about carrying her tail behind her? A.—No.

Q.—Mr. Warburton, how many reporters besides yourself were taking notes there? A.—I can't say, exactly; there were several.

Q.—What paper did you report for? A.—I reported for the DAILY TIMES, in conjunction with other reporters.

Q.—Do you know who reported for the Herald? A.—I know several.

Q.—Did Mary Donohue, while testifying, appear embarrassed? A.—I could hardly say one was embarrassed, as I understood the term.

Q.—How near was she to the Coroner during her examination, when he made the remark about her carrying her tail? A.—I don't suppose there could have been more than two feet between them.

Q.—In what did she exhibit that she was not perfectly at her ease? A.—In her manner of giving her testimony.

Q.—Is that all the answer you can give to the last question? A.—Her manner was that—

Q.—Is that all the answer you can give to the last question? A.—I can give you a longer answer if you want it.

Q.—Is that all the answer you can give to that question, be it it not? A.—Oh, I can give you a longer answer if you require it.

Q.—Will you give all the answer you can? A.—Her manner was that of one who was not accustomed to give testimony; she felt herself under strange circumstances to her, and appeared a little nervous and agitated; that is all my answer.

Q.—Was Mrs Cunningham in the room at the time Stephens or Hildreth was examined? A.—No, not that I saw; I don't think she was.

Q.—What is your answer, yes or no? A.—I say no. I did not see her; I am perfectly satisfied myself she was not there.

Catherine Donnavan was sworn and examined by the Assistant District Attorney.

Q.—Were you at any time present at an examination of the person of Mrs Cunningham?

Mr. Jordan supposed the only question that could be put to this witness was that as to the directions that might have been given by the Coroner.

The Judge asked under what charge this question was asked.

The Assistant District-Attorney answered that it was under the 8th specification of the first charge.

The Judge said the query must be as to whether the Coroner gave the order.

The Assistant District-Attorney explained that Dr. Woodward had been in Court to prove that, but had eloped just before the previous witness left the stand. He would prove, however, that the Coroner's official agent (his son, the deputy) was present at the examination. If that were deemed inadmissible, they would have to adjourn at this point.

The Judge adhered to his opinion that this witness could not be asked as to what had occurred at the examination of Mrs. Cunningham until it had been shown in the first place that the examination was directed by the Coroner.

It was then agreed that an adjournment should take place till Friday next at 10 A. M.

In addition to the above, there are nine store-ships, carrying twenty-eight guns; several gun-boats, and the usual smaller craft belonging to a large fleet. The Navy mounts 945 guns, most of them of large size; comprises steamers whose aggregate horse-power is 5,696, and is in every department in the highest state of efficiency.

The Army at the present time numbers about 160,000 men. There are on hand at home about 300,000 modern percussion muskets, and 150,000 flint lock, all in good condition. The light regiments are, of course, armed with the Minié rifle. The artillery is one of the finest in the world. Each battery has six pieces bronze twelve pounders and two twenty four pounders—eight pieces in all. There are also light batteries of six-pounder bronze pieces, and one mounted battery of twelve-pounders and two four pound howitzers, in which every man has a horse, and the pieces are harnessed with horses, instead of mules. The mountain artillery is a splendid regiment, armed with twelve pounder bronze howitzers, mounted on the backs of great mules, and carbines slung at the shoulders of the men. Spain is by no means unprepared, so far as her material outfit is concerned, for a vigorous campaign.

THE VETERAN CORPS OF THE STATE of New-York, of the war of 1812, '14, and '15, to their fellow citizens: The members of this incorporated body, were formerly associated with other survivors of said war, and known as "The Veteran Corps." The officers of the corps were generally looked up to with veneration and esteem by their fellow members, and nearly all the concerns of the body—financial, as well as other matters—were entrusted to their management. As the corps increased in numbers, and advanced in public notice and regard, some unscrupulous characters sought and obtained admission to membership. That unfortunate accession by no means materially advanced the prosperity of the body, nor increased its respectability, however much it may have benefitted individuals in a pecuniary sense. On various occasions, when appeals have been made and cheerfully responded to by our warm hearted fellow-citizens, in aid of the indigent or sick Veterans of the War of 1812, much of the funds thus raised for charitable purposes were appropriated to our dissatisfaction. We in vain remonstrated against such doings; no redress could be had, as the Corps was not recognized by law; therefore, as the only available means of relief from such grievances, many of us took measures for becoming incorporated, (having first dissolved all connection with those whom we no longer desired to associate with)—by that we mean only a few who set themselves up as leaders of the many conscientious and respectable citizens, who were in no wise giving up the manufacturing. Lagren.—The mermaid forests of Pasteria are inhabited, it is said, by Pixies, Sprites and Elves, who, like the Phantom Dancers of Germany, delight to entrap travelers into their realms and torment them with their mischievous antics. Having the power of transforming the spirit, they often, in their malicious gambols, give life to the newly dead. Statues, rocks and trees are seen fantastically moving in the forest, but it is only during the day they retain their fictitious existence; at the approach of night they resume their immobility.

AGRICULTURAL.

GENTLEMEN HAVING COUNTRY SEATS AND GARDENS will find THE IMPROVED POUDRETTE of the subscribers one of the most FERTILIZERS as well as the CHEAPEST embellishments for manure, where there is difficulty in procuring sufficient for garden and farm purposes. Its chief recommendations are, that it is neat, inoffensive, CONTAINS NO SEEDS OR WEEDS, is very quick and powerful in its operation upon vegetables, and at the same time is so harmless that it can be put in direct contact with the seed or plant without injury, which is totally unlike other fertilizers. It will bring early crops of peas, beans, potatoes, sweet corn, &c., and for lawns and grass plots is unrivalled. The small quantity used and ease of application render it very economical. The price for 1 barrel is $2; 8 barrels, $5; and $1 50 per bbl. for any quantity over 8 barrels, delivered free in the City. A pamphlet will be forwarded by mail, or furnished gratis on application. NEWS OF THE DAY.

Our London and Paris correspondence, received by the Niagara, and published in another part of this morning's issue, will be read with interest. In our London letter, full particulars will be found of the elections which commenced in Great Britain and Ireland on the day the steamer left Liverpool. Unlike our systems, a general election in England is not held throughout the country at the same time, but each constituency appoints a day for the election of its own members. The writs for the new Parliament are returnable on the 3rd of April instant, but before that time arrives, it will be known whether Lord PALMERSTON is or is not sustained by the people. His prospects continue favorable, and the report that the Emperor of China disapproves of the doings at Canton, is averse to war, and is anxious to conciliate the British, is received most opportunely, and will probably ensure the Premier's triumph.

We have partial indications of the vote that will be given by some of the more important constituencies in the United Kingdom. At the nomination of candidates on the 27th ult., Lord JOHN RUSSELL had the largest show of hands for the City of London. Messrs. BRIGHT & POTTER, for for Manchester; Messrs. ROEBUCK and HADFIELD, for Sheffield, and W. COBDEN, for Huddersfield. All these candidates are anti-ministerial.

Our Paris correspondent gives a resumé of the French Press on Mr. BUCHANAN'S Inaugural address. The opinions of our French cotemporaries, as in the present case, are often curious and generally readable.

From the continent of Europe we have intelligence of a complete diplomatic rupture between Austria and Piedmont. The event affords great satisfaction to Russia, whose hatred of Austria is unbounded. It is not believed, however, that the differences between Austria and Piedmont will extend beyond a temporary interruption of diplomatic intercourse. Spain, it is now said, intends to land a force and occupy a position on Mexican territory. The first division of the invading fleet would sail for Havana on the 28th of February. There are rumors from Naples that King BOMBA is disposed to make some concessions in favor of his subjects; but at the same time we read that he has authorized the introduction of a frightful instrument of torture, surpassing anything known in the darkest days of the Inquisition. "Experiments" were made upon two unfortunate prisoners, and they were not expected to recover from the horrible effects of the torture. The Neufchatel Conference had resumed its sitting, and it is now stated, on reliable authority, that the differences between Prussia and Switzerland will soon be satisfactorily adjusted.

A correspondent of the London Times writing from Montevideo on the 4th of February, says that "Paraguay has refused to ratify the treaty made with the United States, ostensibly because there have been some verbal alterations made in it, but, it is believed, in reality because President LOPEZ wishes first to see the issue of the late Consul HOPKIN'S demands for damages."

The New-York Charter bill has at length been passed through both branches of the Legislature—the Assembly, on Saturday, having concurred in the Senate's amendments. The Metropolitan Police bill was also virtually passed—the Senate having signified their approbation of its provisions by the very decided vote of 27 in its favor to 5 against it, after amending it in some unimportant particulars. It will be seen, on reference to our telegraphic summary of Saturday's proceedings, that various other matters of importance were acted upon.

Serious trouble has arisen from the Indians in Iowa. We have a letter dated at Webster City, in that State, March 22, containing the following: "Our town is considerably excited in regard to trouble with the Indians. Nineteen dead bodies have been found near Spirit Lake, about sixty miles northwest of Fort Dodge. The Indians have been committing their depredations for some little time, and are daily growing bolder and more reckless in their attacks. The people of this and the adjoining towns are raising men and munitions. A company will leave Fort Dodge on the 24th well provided for, and determined to avenge their murdered brothers and friends."

The investigation into Coroner CONNERY'S conduct on the "Grand Burdell Inquest" was resumed Saturday. Only one witness, Mr. WARBURTON, a reporter, was examined. Next Friday the case will come up again.

The Broadway Tabernacle Society have purchased ten lots on the northeast corner of Thirty-fourth-street and Sixth-avenue, for $78,000, and will soon commence building on it.

There were 438 deaths in the City last week, an increase of 27 over the number of the week previous.

SAMUEL OSBORNE and SAMUEL TAYLOR, first and second mates of the Samuel Russel, were examined, Saturday, before United States Commissioner WARD, charged with having caused the death of one of the crew, named WILLIAMS, on the last voyage from China, by beating and ill using him. The test-mony, conflicting badly, the complaint was dismissed. A similar complaint against these men for the murder of "Dutch Bill" was dismissed a few days ago.

An examination was held on Saturday by Mr. Commissioner STILLWELL, in the case of JOHN STACEY, second mate of the Christiana, charged with cruelly beating a sailor of the ship named JAS. W. GORDON, during the recent voyage from London to this port. Several witnesses testified that the second mate inflicted upon GORDON very severe and lasting injuries. The Commissioner reserved his decision until to-day.

Mayor WOOD and City Judge RUSSELL met on Friday last, and appointed three men, Police Captains, viz.: MIKE MURRAY for First Ward, in place of HALPIN, whose term of office expired. J... WARNER, for Thirteenth Ward, in place of ..., dismissed, and W... for Seventeenth Ward, in place of HAIN, whose term of office expired. They also re-appointed Capts. DILKS and ACKERMAN, the former to the captaincy of the Fifteenth, and the latter to that of the Ninth Ward.

The Turkish Press.

The Turkish Government, says the last news from Europe, has established a registration and censorship of the press on the French model. As in the whole Empire there are only three or four published—and only one of these in Turkish—and as they are all small scraps of paper filled with laudations, a la Française, of the powers that be, this measure is not likely to press heavily upon the public. The Journal de Constantinople, the chief of the lot, is published in French, and owes its existence mainly to a subscription from the State, which it repays by lavish glorification of the Sultan, the Pashas in office for the time being, and the general excellence of the Turkish Constitution in Church and State. Number two is the Presse d'Orient, another French print, taking a precisely similar view of public affairs, the only difference between it and its colleague being that arising out of the deadly animosity which exists between the editors, and which led to a duel with small swords, little more than a year ago, between the rival "publicists." These two are published in Pera—the Frank quarter of the capital, and are indebted for their circulation to the French reading merchants and dealers there, and in the ports on the Black Sea and the Danube. They have a cotemporary in Smyrna, the precise name of which we forget; but its resemblance to them is in all respects so great as to render its title a matter of no importance. The Turkish journal of Stamboul—the official Gazette—contains only decrees and appointments, and translations of the more striking bits of brag which appear in the columns of its "gravner" colleagues. Its circulation, strange as it may appear, is the most restricted of all, as it is confined to that infinitesimally small portion of the Turkish population which knows how to read, composed mainly of the Muftis and Imamns, and theological students attached to various Mosques, the professional writers, or "Kyatibs,"—for hand-writing is a profession to itself—and the higher State functionaries. Consequently, any one who supposes that this adoption of the Divan of the great "idée Napoleonienne," which bases the national safety upon three "avertissements," will cause great inconvenience and lamentation upon the sacred territory of Islam, deceives himself grossly. It is only worth notice as indicative of the wretched precision with which that barbarous old ape, the Turkish Empire, is ready to imitate the worst and most mischievous features in the administration of a foreign country, whether they profess the slightest capacity of application to its own social or political organization or not.

The fact of the matter is, that there seems no reasonable prospect of any attempt to "create and foster public opinion in Turkey and make it racy of the soil" meeting with the smallest measure of success, without a revolution which would erase from its political organization every one of its prominent and distinctive characteristics. In the first place, the written language of the Turks is a language in which foreign words and foreign idioms are so largely intermixed as to render it completely unintelligible to the great mass of the people, and to give to those who can handle it with facility all the dignity and distinction of professors of an occult science. It would require a literary revolution nearly as great as that which has occurred in England since Norman was the language of the castles and the law courts, and Saxon of the cabins and of the "Merrie grene wood," to bring literature to bear upon the Mussulman villagers of Roumelia and Anatolia, and certainly no class which as yet exists in Turkey is likely to set to work to bring any such revolution about. The French journals of Pera, to which we have been referring, circulate mainly among foreign colonists, who live under foreign jurisdiction, whose allegiance centres in the embassy of their nation, and whose greatest boast and glory is, that living in Turkey, they are not only not Turkish, but hate and contemn everybody and everything which bears the name. Upon these people, whose influence upon the country through its commerce is yearly increasing, and, since the war, promises to be greater than ever, nothing that is written or published at Constantinople produces the slightest effect. Their books reach them with their bills of goods, and their newspapers come through the French or Austrian Post-Offices, and are no more subject to Turkish censure or control than if they had never left the shelves of DIDEROT or LONGMAN, or issued from London or Paris printing offices. The class upon which the Press in Turkey will yet work wonders, but which is as yet totally unfitted for its operation, and totally unaffected by any restrictions that may be placed upon it, is a class whose very existence the venal scribes of Pera and Smyrna affect to ignore, and whom European diplomatists refuse to see except through spectacles provided by the Sultan. The Christian populations of Bosnia, Bulgaia, Roumelia,—and Servia for that matter may be joined with them,—are only awakening from the sleep of degradation into which five centuries of degradation has thrown them. Their condition during the last hundred and fifty years, though marked by many grievances and hardships, has been one admirably calculated to fit them for self-government. The state of weakness in which the Turkish Empire has now so long lingered, if it has deprived the rajahs of systematic police, has at least saved them from systematic oppression. If they have been exposed to frequent acts of violence, those acts have been isolated, and they have not been demoralized by the degrading tutelage which a powerful centralization always involves. They have lived quietly in their remote, lonely villages, coming in contact with their masters, only in the payment of the baratch, but managing their internal affairs in their own way, and answerable in civil as well as criminal matters to chiefs of their own faith. Had the Turks been wiser or more humane, their Christian subjects would to-day have been worse off. The blending of the various populations of the Empire at the feet of a despot would have been more disastrous to the latter in the long run than a position of superiority and vassalage has as yet proved. Christian Turkey contains the germs of an admirable Municipal system, and in municipalities are to be found the only solid basis for freedom.

WHAT SHALL BE DONE WITH THE CRYSTAL PALACE?—This is a question that affects the citizens of New-York much more than it affects the creditors or stockholders of that beautiful but unfortunate edifice. Shall the Palace be torn down, and its costly materials distributed among the dealers in broken glass and old iron; or shall its crystal walls be allowed to stand—the ornament and pride of our metropolis?

This question is now seriously considered by a Committee of the Board of Aldermen, before whom a petition for the removal of the Palace has been made by a small company of land speculators, owning lots in the vicinity of its location. The result of the Committee's investigation is awaited with much interest.

To regard this matter independently of all personal considerations, it seems to us that the destruction of the Crystal Palace will be both an injury and a disgrace to New-York. To destroy the most remarkable, not to say the most beautiful building on this Continent,—the only building of its kind on this side of the Atlantic, and, probably, the only one that will be erected here within the lifetime of any of our readers; and to destroy it merely for the purpose of gratifying a few speculators in building lots, would be an act of vandalism unworthy of our day. The Crystal Palace should be preserved, both for what it is and for what it may become to our citizens. It should be perpetuated as one of the public institutions of our City.

The palace was erected by private capital, at a cost of about seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars. As a financial speculation, it has been a failure, and a total loss to its stockholders. But as an object of rare interest, attracting strangers to the City, it has enriched our citizens and given a healthy stimulus to various departments of our industry. Its beneficial influence in this respect can be easily continued by placing the building upon a permanent financial basis. To accomplish this end, it is now proposed to sell the Palace to the City for $150,000, which is but a little more than its materials would sell for, should the structure be demolished. The land upon which the Palace now stands belongs to the City, and is part of the square lying "between the Fifth and Sixth avenues and Fortieth and Forty-second streets," which was "appropriated for a Reservoir," by a resolution of the Board of Aldermen passed July 31, 1837, and approved by the Mayor on the 20th September following. Until this lot is needed for a Reservoir, which will not be in our generation, the Palace could remain there without any detriment to the City. Indeed, as long as it remains there, it ornaments a square of land which would otherwise be a barren waste; since the purpose for which the lot was originally set aside precludes its conversion to a public park, or any permanency other than a Croton Reservoir.

Should the City purchase the Crystal Palace, it is understood that the American Institute stand ready to take a lease of the building for a term of years, paying therefor an annual rent of $10,000. Here the Institute will hold a perpetual Fair throughout the year, and under its management the Crystal Palace will be reorganized as the great Emporium of American Art and Industry. The same attractions which drew strangers hither, from far and near, in its palmy days, will then be renewed and multiplied; and the City of New York will become, more than ever, the magnet of every traveler.

In these considerations alone, there is abundant reason to justify the Common Council in purchasing the Crystal Palace. By that act they will be doing something for the immediate benefit of every citizen, and adding to the Capital of the New World an architectural monument of which the whole country may justly be proud.

NEW-YORK RE-WARDED.—Local attachments are hardly possible in this City, and that phrenological bump which indicates such a passion must be extremely small, if it have any existence at all, in the heads of New-Yorkers. Even New-York cats must be deficient in the sentiment of local attachment, which is the peculiarity of their race, they become so accustomed to living in strange garrets. If JOHN MILTON were to revisit London he would find the house still standing in which he used to live; Dr. JOHNSON would find St. John's Gate, where he worked for CAVE, the publisher, very little changed, and Queen ELIZABETH would find her successor, VICTORIA, holding Court in the same palace in which she resided herself; Sir CHRISTOPHER WREN would find all the Churches still in good condition which he erected, and even the children of EDWARD would be but little changed in the room in which they went to sleep on the night when they were smothered by order of their cruel uncle.

But the New-Yorker who left his native City but two or three years ago, if he were to return after the first of next month, would not be able to find even the Ward in which he was born. The church in which he may have been christened will have disappeared; the name of the street where he lived may be changed, the street itself may have been so widened, straightened and rebuilt as to be another street altogether; and half the old familiar objects and landmarks which he left behind may be gone. The whole is constantly undergoing a change; but the most embarrassing alterations will be caused by changing the boundaries of the Wards. Until we become used to the redistricting of the City the new Wards will lead to great confusion of ideas. The "bloody Sixth," for example, will be completely eradicated from existence, and the New Sixth Ward will be, in fact, in its character, just the reverse of the present one. The four lower Wards are all thrown into one, and the Fifteenth will find itself out towards Harlem.

This re-Warding of the City is, in fact, the most important part of the new Charter; it will give the people something like an equal representation in the City Government, and be productive of the most beneficial results in changing the character of the Common Council. There will no longer be any such rotten boroughs as the six lower Wards have been the past fifteen or twenty years.

WILL MAYOR WOOD RESIGN?—As Mayor WOOD has repeatedly avowed his determination to resign in the event of the passage of the new Charter, and the Police Bill, it becomes a question of no small interest whether he intends to put his threat into execution, or not; whether he will resign his office, or resign himself to the new order of affairs. The new Charter will go into operation on the first of next month, and after that the Mayor will become rather more of an ornamental appendage to the City Hall than the duties of the office will permit him to be at present. As the Mayoralty will be relieved of so many important duties, Alderman CLANCY may be found quite equal to their discharge. It is said, however, that he regards himself as so entirely competent for the place that he is already taking Time by the forelock, and making preparations to be a candidate for the succession next December at all events. It is understood that the Mayor intends visiting Europe in the event of his resigning.

POOR BENNETT.—The "historian" of the Parker Vein is reduced to the condition of Lord BYRON when he commenced writing his Don Juan. He wants a subject for his historic pen. There are no more Potosi or Parker Veins to chronicle, and bogus companies have become almost obsolete. The "historian," for the lack of a better subject, has turned his attention to the moral drama, and has commenced writing up Mrs. MCMAHON and writing down MATILDA HERON. The unfortunate lady who has become the subject of the Herald's distinguished patronage is entitled to the compassion of the public; although she gives the world to understand that, like Parker Vein and other objects to which the Herald has extended its favors, she pays well for all she receives. The distress of the Herald lest the theatrical public should be injured by witnessing the performance of such dramas as "Camille" is truly wonderful. Poor BENNETT has got tired of predicting a crisis in Europe, and as for the terrible commercial revulsion which he has so long foretold, it keeps adjourning itself like Father MILLER'S end of the world, in a most perverse manner; he has abandoned the clergy, who won't go to the dogs to please him, and now, as a dernier resort, he is down upon the theatres and Miss MATILDA HERON. Poor BENNETT is manifestly on his last legs, and they are very weak and shaky at that.

RAILROAD COMMISSION.—The State Railroad Commissioners have recommended the repeal of the law by which their office was created. The reasons assigned are that all the duties which they have any power to perform can be quite as well discharged by the State Engineer and Surveyor. A bill has been introduced in conformity with their recommendation, which, we trust, will pass.

The creation of this Commission was mainly for the purpose of establishing some legal authority over the Railroads of the State. We suspect the experiment is a failure. The Railroads make no returns unless they choose to do so,—pay no attention to the rules and regulations which have been established for their government, and in all respects ignore all attempts of the Legislature to exercise any control or restraint over them. The fact is, the Railroad Corporations of this State have the complete control of its government. Their influence over the Legislature is supreme; no bill affecting their interests passes without their consent, and whatever legislation they require for their own benefit they are quite certain to get. Under these circumstances it is folly for the State to keep up any show of authority over them. The Railroad Commission must, of necessity, become a mere sinecure, and the sooner it is abolished the better. The bill for that purpose has passed the Senate, and will, doubtless—as it should—go through the Assembly also.

A NEW SCHEME.—A prospectus has been issued for a new weekly paper in this City, to be called the Southern Herald, and to be devoted to the furnishing of information "concerning the politics of New-York merchants." The following paragraph from the prospectus indicates the spirit in which it will be conducted:

"We acknowledge no fellowship or equality with Abolitionists, and our whole energies will be directed against them, both in a social and business point of view."

The Frankfort (Ky.) Commonwealth, in which we find a notice of this sheet, says that those "who feel more interested in learning whether or not New-York merchants are sound upon the negro question than they do in ascertaining where they can get the best goods, and get them cheapest," will find it much to their advantage to subscribe to this new sheet.

INFORMATION WANTED.—We see by the report of the proceedings of the Legislature that a bill "relative to stage routes" in this City has passed the Assembly. We should like to know the nature of this bill. We were told on good authority some days since that the various companies owning stage routes had been assessed six dollars a stage to raise a fund to secure the passage of this bill, and that all but one submitted to the assessment and paid the money. Will somebody at Albany be good enough to send us a copy of the bill?

A "Regular and Steady Growth."

From the Herald, Feb. 26, 1857.

The Herald has reached a daily circulation of nearly 80,000—its increase over the circulation of last year being nearly 20,000 per day. But the growth of the New-York Herald for twenty years has been as regular and certain as the growth of the population and trade of this metropolis.

From the Herald, April 11, 1857.

During the last month our regular circulation has reached nearly 70,000 per day! ["Regular and steady!"]

A PARALLEL CASE.

From the Herald, April 20, 1853.

It is the intention of the Parker Vein Coal Company to construct 52 steamers for the freighting business between Baltimore, Alexandria and New-York. Twelve steamships will give one a day from each port, but this will not begin to meet the demand for transportation!

From the Herald, June 11, 1854.

The developments recently made in Parker Vein Coal Stock are enough to deter outsiders from touching anything of that kind again!

The Brick Church.

About 6 o'clock Saturday night, thousands of persons stood breathless to see the tower of the old Brick Church fall. Those who were belated down town and so enjoyed the sight, thanked their stars for the delay, for it was an occurrence worth going a good way to see.

The method of leveling the tower was ingenious. Only the spire had been removed, and all passers by wondered how they would ever get so solid and so towering a mass as that flat, unless by sections, or by killing a host of workmen in its fall. The iconoclasts were scientific men however.

The corners of the tower were shored up with pitch pine timbers, and the brick of the eastern side then all removed. When it had been so far undermined that there was no question that the tower would fall to the eastward so soon as the props should be removed, they were surrounded with charcoal, tar and turpentine in large quantities. Fire was then communicated to the combustibles, which, in about fifteen minutes, burned off the props, and the whole structure above, leaning more and more, toppled at last to the ground with a crash that might pass for a respectable earthquake. Some parts of the falling wall bit the arch that still remained of the rear end—the back of the ancient pulpit—and sent it hurrying off in fragments toward Spruce-street. Last night, about 9 o'clock, flames burst out suddenly from the ruins, but they were soon got under.

IMPORTANT FROM ALBANY.

Passage of the New-York Charter and Metropolitan Police Bills.

Great Excitement in the Assembly—The Affair Between Beckwith and Hastings—The Port Wardens' Bill Passed—Harbor Masters, &c.

Correspondence of the New-York Daily Times.

ALBANY, Saturday, April 11.

The proceedings in the House during the afternoon and evening of yesterday, though of slight general importance, were of a very exciting character.

Shortly previous to the afternoon's recess, in the order of the third reading of bills, there came up an act to amend a law passed in 1856. Its title did not clearly define what was the character of the proposed amendments, or rather the character of the bill to be amended. It turned out that the act to be amended was the celebrated bill to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Hudson River at Albany.

When it was announced, Mr. BECKWITH, of Washington County, obtained the floor, and moved to recommit the bill to the Committee on Roads and Bridges, with instructions to take testimony relative to the merits of the proposed amendments. He stated that the bill had been introduced under a deceptive title, had been surreptitiously passed through the Committee on Roads and Bridges, had been referred to the Sub Committee of the Whole, without any person properly understanding what it was, and smuggled through the Sub-Committee during the temporary absence of the members of that Committee from the North, who would have felt it their duty to make a strenuous opposition to a measure which they knew so vitally affected the interests of their constituents. He denounced the conception and progress of the bill so far as it had gone as base and infamous, and in clear, distinct and unequivocal terms expressed his contempt and indignation for and against those who, as he thought, had attempted to violate the clear intent and meaning of the Constitution to carry through an unjust measure. Mr. BECKWITH was not by any means delicate in the phraseology in which he choose to express his indignation, nor over fastidious in the manifestation of that indignation.

But the motion and the manner in which it was advocated, were well calculated to awaken the resentment of parties interested—and when such a project as the bridge is up, it seems that all the lobby and the State Legislature is interested, and about equally so—and of course there was much commotion both inside and outside of the Assembly Chamber. Many of the prominent gentlemen of the House spoke on one or the other side of the proposition, and spoke evidently under great excitement. Finally the motion to recommit was carried, and inside, the excitement apparently subsided.

Outside, however, of the Chamber, there was rather an increase than a subsidence of the excitement, which was protracted through the afternoon.

When the House assembled in the evening, among the bills which came up was one providing for the reorganization of the Executive chamber. This bill had been so amended in Committee as to materially change its character. The Committee had not, however, had the forethought so to amend the title as to make it express the character and object of the bill. Mr. H. BAKER moved to recommit to the Committee of the Whole for the purpose of their considering the character of the bill, and so amending its title as to make it conform to the requirements of the Constitution. He spoke somewhat at length on the motion, and with some evidence of opposition to its provisions. But at the conclusion of his remarks, he withdrew his motion.

It was immediately renewed by Mr. PAUL, and thereafter followed a renewal of the excitement which had pervaded the chamber during the debate on the motion to recommit the bill for the bridge amendments. It seemed as if the opponents of the bridge bill were the friends of the pending measure, and that to a great extent the combatants had changed their battle-ground, and were intent upon a renewal of the strife which had been suspended on the breaking up of the afternoon session. Mr. WOOSTER warmly advocated the bill, and still more warmly defended the Governor, who had been attacked on account of this bill in one of the daily papers of this city.

Mr. BECKWITH took the same side, and in the course of his remarks stigmatized the writer of an article which had appeared in the Knickerbocker newspaper, as "a low political scavenger." Mr. HASTINGS, the Editor of that paper, is a reporter on the floor. When Mr. BECKWITH had concluded, he occupied a position near the door of the clerk-room. Mr. HASTINGS was seen to approach him, and in a moment thereafter he was struck, or rather cuffed on his head by Mr. BECKWITH.

Of course there was immediately a scene of the greatest confusion. The crowded lobbies and the members were themselves in a high state of excitement. The Speaker rapped to order—the doors were locked, and only by the strongest exertions were the elements of discord quieted down, and order brought out of chaos.

When quiet had been obtained, Mr. BECKWITH rose and expressed his regret that he should have been the cause of such an extraordinary scene. He apologized to the House for the indiscretion of which he had been guilty, and stated in justification that he had been approached in a threatening manner and with offensive language by Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. POMEROY, in behalf of Mr. HASTINGS, stated that he had intended no personal threats to Mr. BECKWITH.

Finally a Committee of investigation was ordered, and there for the present the matter rests.

The bill which had continued the combat, like that which had given it birth, was recommitted.

To-day was third reading of bills in both Houses. The Senate had read and passed the Police bill, in which were embodied the amendments I have heretofore noted. These amendments were concurred in by the House, and therefore the Police bill is as good as a law.

The House also concurred in the Senate amendments to the Charter, and that is also before the Governor.

The Senate amendments to the Port Warden's bill were concurred in by the House.

The Assessment bill passed the House, and will no doubt pass the Senate.

No appointments of Harbor Masters or Port Wardens have yet been made, but I think they will come along on Monday. I feel assured in saying that they would have been made before this, but for the fact that there was pending in the Legislature a bill reorganizing the Port Warden's Department; that having received the final action of the two Houses, the appointments will no doubt be made at once. Amusements.

On Saturday evening Mr. OLE BULL gave a grand concert in aid of the Masonic Board of Relief, given off at Niblo's Saloon. The night was not well chosen, and the attendance was, in consequence, small. Then it would have been under other and more favorable circumstances. The programme was miscellaneous; a neat and efficient orchestra of thirty-five performers played a couple of overtures, and the orchestra accompaniments to the various movements; Signor ... PARONI sang a pair of arias, (somewhat gaudy;) Mr. OLE BULL played his concerto in A, and two pieces; the Mendelssohn Union gave the finale to the first act of "Lorly," and a selection from "Athalie," when Miss MARY E. HAWLEY sang SCHNEIDER'S eternal "Wanderer;" Miss VICTORIA GILLIS rendered an aria from VERDI, and Signor GIAMONI (a tenor robusto of consideration) another from the same composer.

Mr. OLE BULL, we are sorry to remark, is ... and ailing. He is no longer the strong, robust man we remember of old. Ill health and other troubles have crowded thickly on the philanthropic Norwegian, and with their customary effect. He is still a great and admirable artist, capable of more than can be accomplished by any other performer living, but at times the inevitable feebleness of disease manifests itself. On Saturday this was observable principally in the Concerto—a vague work requiring the most powerful individuality in execution, which Mr. BULL does not appear to be strong enough to impart to it at present. Let us hope that his forthcoming tour will give him new strength to win new triumphs.

Next in importance to Mr. OLE BULL was the co-operation of the Mendelssohn Union—a young and extremely vigorous musical society. The Union has the good fortune to possess Mr. MOSELEY for Conductor, (a gentleman who feels thoroughly assured of the genius of his master,) and a large number of performing members, many of whom are widely known for their artistic ability. It is the most hard-working and efficient musical association in New York, and in a short time has made prodigious strides. The first morceau was the finale to MENDELSSOHN'S "Lorely." In no respect did this impress us as a favorable exhibition of the powers of the Society. The chorus was unsteady; the orchestra tempestuous, and the solos amateurish to a degree. In the "Athalie" selection, however, ample amends were made for these shortcomings. We have no recollection of a more excellent performance. There were few in the chorus, well-balanced accuracy in the soloists, and precision in the orchestra. A few such performances would place Mr. MOSELEY on a firmer footing than he now occupies in this city. The solos were sustained by Mrs. C. M. ... Miss HATTIE ANDER, Miss MARY E. HAWLEY, and Mrs MARIA LEACH. Another lady took part in the proceedings, but at her particular desire we refrain from mentioning her name. On a former occasion when referring to her efforts, we were so unhappy as to fall short of the standard of praise erected by her friends, and by which we hear she had too unwisely measured herself. To remind us of this unstudied fact the lady in question has favored us with a brief, but emphatic note, desiring, somewhat tartly, that her name be not mentioned in connection with this entertainment. Whether suggested by positive cruelty or actual discretion, this prohibition is painful, because it assures us that we have lost the admiration of a very charming lady. But we will gratify her whim in the most ample manner, and for the future carefully abstain from mentioning her name in any way whatever. Will this satisfy our fair but indignant correspondent? We shall of course speak of her public performance whenever we think people ought to do so—but in a veiled and fearful way.

NIBLO'S GARDEN.—After an absence which has been sorely felt, MAX MARETZEK returns to the City and to his proper post as musical conductor of the Opera, but not of the Academy. Owing to other arrangements, which time will develop, that sphere is lost to him, and his operations will be carried on at a rival establishment. Those who are familiar with the ability, energy and pluck of Mr. WIZARD MAX have no fear of the result, especially as he has the straightforward and inflexible W. H. PAINE for a coadjutor. The opera season commences to-night at NIBLO'S handsome establishment, and everything seems to promise a campaign of unusual brilliancy. In a pecuniary point of view there is no doubt of a prosperous season.

The feature of to-night's programme (the "Traviata") is the début of Mme. GAZZANIGA in the rôle of the heroine—a part in which she has created the greatest enthusiasm in Philadelphia. BRIGNOLI, AMODIO and COLLETTI are also in the casts.

NIBLO'S SALOON.—HERR SCHNEIDER, a pianist of pretension, gives his first grand concert to-night, assisted by Mme. DE WILHORST. Mr. SCHNEIDER plays Mr. SCHNEIDER'S compositions exclusively, and therefore appeals to the public in the double capacity of composer and performer.

NEW-YORK HARMONIC SOCIETY.—The members of the Harmonic Society repeat their performance of Dr. Lewis' Cantata, the "Seven Sleepers," to-night, at Dodworth's Saloon, under the direction of Mr. G. F. BRISTOW. It is to be hoped the weather will be more favorable than on the last occasion. After the Cantata, BRISTOW'S "Te Deum and Jubilate."

The Freshets at the North.

BANGOR, Saturday, April 11.

The freshet on the Piscataquis River has been the severest known for years. Six bridges have been carried away. At Foxcroft it carried away the brick building owned by W. W. HARRIS, Esq., which was formerly a Hee and Fork Factory, damaged the foundry building slightly, carried away a portion of the dam, and materially injured Woolen factory of MAYO & SON. At Dover the water carried away the bridge, a portion of the granite wall of the Canal, injured S. F. BROWN'S Woolen factory and destroyed the dam of the Saw mill at the Lower Village, JOSEPH BROWN'S Grist and Saw Mill was carried away, and also the bridge at Guilford. The damage on the Penobscot and Kennebec Rivers is also extensive. At Guilford the driver of a stage supposing the bridge was only overflowed, drove his team into the river and lost it. Himself and the passengers narrowly escaped drowning.

THE WAR IN NICARAGUA.

Having been absent from your City and much occupied with matters of a personal nature, your paper, dated the 4th inst., either failed to reach me, or was overlooked amid the press of more immediate business. This must be my sufficient excuse to the "Officer of Nicaragua," who did me the doubtful honor in that issue to suppose me "the instrument of Gen. GOICOURIA, the confidential book-keeper of VANDERBILT, and a kind of literary underetrapper to Mr. M. O. ROBERTS." [Correct me if I err in this quotation, as I only saw the letter referred to on file in the counting-room of your office.] It strikes me that Capt. J. E. FARNUM writes quite as well as the "Officer of Nicaragua," and the "Officer of Nicaragua" no whit better than J. E. FARNUM. Both have plainly impaired their somewhat limited knowledge of any language, in their efforts to acquire the tongue in which they must hereafter address the native peons and bond-slaves of the estates specially confiscated for their use by the extremely generous Mr. WALKER. Should both, as I suspect, prove one, then the Captain's rough-and tumble fight with the Costa Rican negroes, the subsequent fandango and the fancy dances, and the cold shoulder turned on him (even in despite of these exploits!) by Col. LOCKRIDGE,—these united agencies must have worked a beneficial change in the Nicaraguan Officer's inward and spiritual man. A second challenge might have increased his popularity (rather on the wane) at the St. Charles; and his judgment deserves credit for having resisted the temptation.

But enough of this absurdity; a statement which contradicts itself in the eyes of all who know anything of the adverse interests alleged to be united in mylettere, may well be treated with contempt. Let us turn to the graver and more elaborate absurdities put forth on the arrival of the Tennessee, under the heading "Highly important from Nicaragua."

It would really seem that the newsmongers and vicarious correspondents of the press had renounced all right of private judgment and criticism when called on to record the news manufactured at Head quarters for the service of the Law Morgan couse. Let a prodigious gooseberry appear to any provincial print, and, before one months have rightly watered for it, forth springs a legion of editorial logicians with bristling pens, all ready to rob our imagination of the feast, by proving that such a gooseberry could never possibly have existed. It is the same with unusual strawberries, and mothers of superior fecundity, five children at a birth and all of them [illegible] and healthy! This is an amount of good fortune [illegible] filling line, which leaves but the Associated [illegible] disciple to pass unchallenged.

Nevertheless, when matters a thousand fold more improbable are sent hither from Rivas, or imported from some of the intermediate manufactories; when we hear—not of five children being born together, which may or may not be possible—but of an army of outlaws who increase in numbers, confidence and strength the more they are routed, slaughtered, starved, pestilence stricken, abandoned, and cut off from all supplies of men, material and refreshment; when we are told (and there must be some military men amongst the critics) that 350 sickly men to-day have wrested from an enemy unmbering 2,500, a position which 500 of the same men, in better health and every way better circumstanced, failed, on four different occasions, to wring from less than half that number of the same enemy; when the intelligence of the victory announces as its practical result that the attacking party, after a hard fight through a cactus ambuscade of two and a half or three miles long, succeeded eventually in regaining shelter under the fortifications from whiob they had broken forth at daybreak as no longer tenable, while the conquered enemy remained masters of the position attacked, and could even spare men from its defence to cut off the retreat of the assailants; when this crazy congeries of contradictory statements, frustrated successes and advances in the retrograde, is received from an avowedly interested source, the men of quibbles and inspections, of argument and incredulity, who lately wasted columns on the number of marrowfat peas contained in a single pod;—these same men open wide their astonished but unreluctant jaws, and the whole horrible bolus goes down, without either deglntition at the time, or any subsequent effort at digestion.

The editor down in Florida who lately stuffed the crop of a turkey-buzzard with diamonds, had, undoubtedly, no other object than to satisfy his printer's demand for another stick-full; and he in Maine, who more recently stranded four mighty whales (minutely discriminating between the ballœna myaticetus, the cachslot and great northern rorqual,) had, probably, no other aim than to improve the health of his readers by giving them a run to the frog-pond in whicb the prodigy was said to be on view. These weak and harmless, if not amiable inventions, could not deceive the vigorous incredulity of our metropolitan censors; the buzzard's crop was opened, and the corn in its interior acknowledged; the Maine man's butterboat was overset, and the suppositious cetacea sent back to blow and flounder at the pole.

But the Law-Morgan hallucination has its hook in the leviathan's nose, and journalism is drawn after it through cambric needle eyes of The Impossible—as certain sinners, in the good book, are said to be drawn through to heaven. The buzzard and marrowfat stories had no interest to be subserved by their credence: the Law-Morgan romances have lives and characters and millions of money, sunk and in expectancy, depending on their manufacture and reception. Is it logic to reject the retail and purposeless improbabilities of the former, while swallowing without shrug or murmur the wholesale impossibilities behind which these million-moneyed gamblers are playing for security?

Let us examine the latest news from Rivas by the light of our former dispatches and see what the whole amounts to.

WALKER, on the 16th of March, gave orders for another attack on St. George. At daybreak on the 17th he commenced the assault, and had just entered the plaza when news reached him that HENNINGSEN, left behind in Rivas with fifty men, was counterchanged by the Central-American allies, and would be shortly overwhelmed unless promptly and effectually succored. Abandoning the victorious attack, the victorious filibusters wheeled round to win another victory by victoriously marching back to the unconquered town in which HENNINGSEN and his fifty were victoriously (or otherwise) defending themselves. But on attempting this, it was found that the road over which, on four previous occasions, (the 26th and 30th January, and 4th and 6th February,) they had victoriously marched to similar victories, was now occupied by their enemies who lay behind the cactus hedges on either side—thus forming a double lane of musketry through which the victorious gentlemen would have to escape with their lives as best they might. Some portion, a majority of them, doubtless did undoubtedly escape, and got back into the city from which the fatuity or desperation of their commander had led them forth at day-break. St. George was not captured: its church still stands on the eastern side of the plaza, and forms the catidel towards which all the trenches, covered ways and places of arms, designed by CHEVALIER (the French Colonel in command) converge: its garrison and the whole allied army encamped within and around it, still receive uninterruptedly their provisions and reinforcements from the lake. Rivas was not relieved of its blockade; its garrison are still cooped up within a narrower compas, and environed by enemies constantly receiving fresh accessions, while the last twenty recruits to HENNINGSEN by GARRISON from San Francisco, were more than compensated, on the wrong side of the ledger, by desertions from the guard of honor sent down to San Juan del Sur to "welcome them"—Nicaragua for, take them prisoners—and the losses of the united party while fighting their way back to join the filibuster force at Rivas.

This is the naked sum and substance of the fifth victory at St. George—using the word after fifth with precisely the same significance that HENNINGSEN and Captain ANDERSON attach to it. Taking their statements without question or abatement, so far as the facts are concerned, their united jubilations are based on these substantial results.

But great importance, it seems, is attached to the circumstance that these letters were written, one to the wife, the other to the father, of the parties writing. "There can be no deception here," cries the gullible critic: "it must be true as gospel," echoes the still more gullible public—and forthwith the recruiting system is recommended, and men are sent off to perish, lest those muskets and howitzers, referred to in the unsigned letter intercepted on the San Juan, should remain without an occupation!

It seems a bopeless task to reason against this universal mullshness. The irrationalities of Bedlam are solid judgment when contrasted with this preposterous credulity. Suppose GEORGE LAW or CHARLES MORGAN were to ask men to go down to Pier 20 and roll molasses hogsheads for them gratuitously for a single day, how many laborers, think you, would engage, out of pure love and affection, in the unrecompensed toil? Yet whon they ask men to desert bome and country, relations, sympathies and the comforts of civilized life in a free country—not for a day, but forever—not at the lose of a dollar, but of life—not to swell the capitals of men already wealthy, (or supposed to be so,) but to destroy, without personal benefit, the livee and properties of poor miserable freemen who are fighting for their homes, their independence, their altars and their wives—not for larger liberty than we here enjoy, but to help elevate a military tyrant who has shot hundreds just like them, giving the order for their death without remorse enough to shake his finger as he sits quietly at his table penning just such victories as these—not to enjoy themselves, even, during a short life and a merry one, (for that desire, in such a class, is common,) but to die dogs' deaths under worse treatment then ever hounds experienced.—when this is the substantial request made by Mr. LAW or MORGAN, the monstrous paradox seems to stagger reason; and discernment is never recovered until its eyes are torn open to glare upon the hopelessness and horror of the engulfing vortex round which they whirl and rush with drunken fury, drawn nearer every instant to that black, spiral, writhing emptiness down which all such Nicaraguan ventures must finally disappear.

"But the letters from HENNINGSEN and ANDERSON were to their nearest and dearest, and could men of character and honor prevaricate or palter at such a crisis, and in the inmost confidence of such relationship?"

Let those who ask this read the following extract: It is taken from the Sun of the 7th of April, and is used to introduce a letter from Captain ALEXANDER T. S. ANDERSON to his father, a resident in this City, I believe, and one who may well be proud of two as gallant sons as ever did desperate service in a desperate cause, still keeping untarnished names where dishonor riots, and holding pure, well-ordered lives in the midst of general debauchery. "We are advised by this mail, moreover," says the journal quoted, "that the brothers ANDERSON" (FRANK on the river and ALECK at head-quarters) "have written regularly by every conveyance, and were disappointed that the letters DID NOT APPEAR IN PRINT, inasmuch as they depended upon their publication as a ready means," and so forth.

What think you now of these private letters? and holding the characters of the writers as high as you will—and we cannot hold them higher than we hold them, the Law-Morgan fame must have perished to a man. "Our [illegible] army not exceeding 200 men all told," says ANDERSON, "were surrounded by the enemy numbering 2,500 to 3,000. We were completely hemmed in. But," continues the Captain, with charming unconsciousness, "we had gained our point" what point in the name of heaven? the capture of St. George?" No! The relief of Rivas? No! but "in drawing them out of the place!!"

Now it is morally certain that the defenders never quitted the plaza, and absolutely certain that they never quitted the Church—their citadel. If they had, WALKER would have taken possession of both, and he marched there at special risk for the special purpose of doing. "All communication with Rivas was cut off" continues ANDERSON, "and we were without provisions." "Their next move, therefore, was to attempt to cut off our retreat." "Rivas being defended only by a few citizens," adds the Captain, "WALKER found himself in a very ticklish position!"

Let me remark that these ticklish positions are altogether too frequent for men to laugh at them; they are the chronic malady of filibusterism, and the "Ready Relief" that shall do away with them must be more miraculous in military matters than any ever bottled and be-puffed for physical.

The fifth victory, therefore, ended in the escape of the Law-Morgan outlaws from the last ticklish position into which their leader's fatuity or desperation had drawn them; by ANDERSON'S account at the date of last writing, the allies were within one thousand yards of Rivas and were not to be touched for two or three days! This is victory with a vengeance: the assaulted town is not taken, but the assaulters are driven back through an organized ambuscade, and more closely besieged than ever in the town from which they sallied! The next victory over the allies at St. George will probably place them in possession of the last square mile of ground held by the invaders in Nicaragua; and the next following immense success of WM. WALKER will probably be his escape to San Francisco, from whence returning to the Atlantic States he could undoubtedly make a good deal o money by lecturing before our Lyceums and other blue-stocking associations on the subject of—Publi Brigandage as an Art.

Finally, let me ask what can Gen. HENNINGSEN mean by his repeated use of the phrase—"this breaks up the allies," or the "allies are broken up," or other words to that effect? In all the previous accounts received from him, he uses these identical, or strictly similar phrases, in connection with the four former victories? and writing after the battle of March 17, we again find this purely military phrase used with a totally unmilitary significance. "Our victory is decisive," he says in one of his private letters designed for the public eye, "and breaks up the allies completely, and in a few weeks all fighting within the boundaries of Nicaragua will be over." We can fancy the grim smile overspreading the General's features as that last paragraph was penned. All fighting will be over in a few weeks, he says; but how? By more filibuster victories with the results herein before examined? or by some terrible defeat of the allies that shall make Presidents MORA and RIVAS undisputed masters of the country?

In another letter to another person of the same date, General HENNINGSEN again uses the stereotyped and suspicious expression: "The defeat is fatal to the enemy—it breaks them up" Another letter (same date and place) from an officer who appears on intimate terms with HENNINGSEN—probably one of his law aid de camps—repeats the dubious phrase in a form only slightly varied, and savering strongly of preconcertment. "American Minié rifles," it says, "and Henningsen howitzers and cannon did the business. The allies are finally used up."

Now how can HENNINGSEN as a military man speak of "breaking up" large masses of men who have neither order, nor morale, nor discipline; but who will scatter in one hour and reassemble the next, with the instinct, and no more shame than a flock of pigeons roused from a stubble field by the crack of a double-barrel, and the feathers flying from two of their wounded comrades? The pigeons will go back to the field so long as they are hungry and grain can be found in its furrow; and the Central Americans will reunite after every temporary or local defeat, and go back to surround the invaders, upon whose extermination their own safety is at stake. This is pretty well instanced by the fact that the last terrible reverses at St. George and along the cactus-road, brought the allies within a thousand yards of the ramparts which, before, they had been three miles away from. The General seriously perils his reputation by the use of such unmeaning rant.

And now, Sir, to conclude. This letter is written—not on private information, as were my former letters—but as a simple criticism on the ex parte statements of those most interested in having their true position misunderstood. The means of conveyance that carried HENNINGSEN'S, ANDERSON'S and General CAZNEAU'S last letters stopped mine, for the same reason that theirs were stopped in the conveyance which brought my former correspondence. It is a drawn game between us on that point, and there I am content to let the matter rest.

God knows this letter has been written with a heavy heart—as one miraculously rescued, who stands upon a cliff and sees fresh victims drifting towards the death that few escape. Friends have gone down in the whirlpool, and friends will follow; the ruin that was closing yawns again, and the experience of two years of massacre is shriveled up from the minds of men by the electric spark that flashes a lie from New Orleans to Wall-street.

NEW-YORK, Jan. 31, 1857.

TO THE STOCKHOLDERS OF THE GALENA AND CHICAGO UNION RAILROAD COMPANY.—The Board of Directors of the Galena and Chicago Union Railroad Company passed the following resolution on the 24th inst.:

Resolved, That the balance of the second mortgage bonds of this Company (about $1,000,000) remaining unsold on the 1st day of May next, be offered to the stockholders of the Company until that date, at seventy-five cents on the dollar, each Stockholder being at liberty to subscribe for as many $1,000 bonds as he may choose, without reference to the amount of stock held by him; but should such subscriptions amount in the aggregate to more than the amount of bonds unsold on the 1st day of May next, the same shall be apportioned among the subscribers in an equitable manner as the circumstances of the case will admit of, reference being had to the amount of stock owned by each on that day.

Subscribers will be required to pay for the bonds awarded them respectively, at the office of Messrs Strachan & Scott, in the City of New York, or at the office of the Secretary of the Company, in Chicago, Illinois, in drafts on New-York at par, or their equivalent, as follows:

25 per cent. on the 1st day of June next.
25 per cent. on the 20th day of June next.
25 per cent. on the 20th day of July next.
25 per cent. on the 1st day of Sept. next.

Any subscriber may be entitled to receive, from time to time, such number of bonds as the payments made will cover; the coupons and interest on payments to be equitably adjusted, as is customary.

All subscriptions for bonds must be forwarded to the Secretary of the Company, at Chicago, Illinois, and no subscriptions received after the 1st day of May next will be recognized.

The bonds offered in accordance with the foregoing resolution, are the second mortgage sinking fund bonds of this Company, of $1,000 each, with coupons of $35 each attached, payable on the 1st days of May and November of each year at the American Exchange Bank in the City of New-York, and the principal reimbursable on the 1st day of May 1867, at the same place.

Annexed hereto you will find a blank subscription paper, which you are requested to fill with such number of the bonds as you desire, and to return the same to the undersigned, at this office, without delay.

OFFICE OF THE WATERTOWN & MADISON R. R. CO., No. 39½ Exchange-place }

$300,000 IN BONDS OF THE CITIES OF MADISON AND WATERTOWN, WIS., FOR SALE.—This road completes a direct and nearly an air line between Milwaukee and Madison, the capital of Wisconsin.

It is thirty-four miles in length, connecting at Watertown with the "Watertown Division" of the La Crosse and Milwaukee Railroad Company, with which it has a contract for a very favorable running connection for thirty years. By this Road the distance between Milwaukee and Madison is 23 miles shorter than by the Milwaukee and Mississippi Railroad. It passes through a good agricultural and highly improved country. Madison and Watertown are two of the most beautiful and thriving cities in the State, being in point of population, business, and wealth, second only to Milwaukee. The city of Madison has issued to this Company, as a loan, her 20-year 7 per cent. coupon Bonds, to the amount of $100,000, with semi-annual interest.

The city of Watertown has issued to the Company, in payment for her subscription to the capital stock 20-year 8 per cent. coupon Bonds, to the amount of $200,000, with semi-annual interest.

The township of Waterloo has issued $35,000, in payment of subscription, in 20-year 8 per cent. coupon Bonds, with interest annually—interest and principal of all the bonds payable in the City of New-York.

The Company offers these Bonds for sale at their office, (No. 39½ Exchange-place,) together with a large amount of 8 per cent. Farm Mortgage Coupon Bonds, guaranteed by the Company.

Further information in regard to the Road may be had at the office of the Company

H. K. LAWRENCE, Treasurer.

CAUTION—TO CAPITALISTS, CONVEYAN- CERS AND THE PUBLIC.—The public are cautioned against certain mortgages on property in the city of Philadelphia, described as a certain tract or parcel of marsh or crippled land, situate on the west side of the Schuylkill River, north of Market-st. Bridge, formerly in the township of Blockley, and now in the XXIVth Ward of the city of Philadelphia. The undersigned, who executed these mortgages, never had any valid title to the premises, and received no consideration for the mortgages in question. He has been imposed upon, and the whole affair is an imposture, well understood in Philadelphia. New-York capitalists are warned against them.

FOR SALE—FOR PRINCIPAL INVESTMENT; 8 per cent. City Gas Company bonds, secured on the net profits for sale in sums to suit purchasers. $60,000 Hancock County (Ill.) 8 per cent. Bonds, dated July 1, 1856, and redeemable at the American Exchange Bank, in New-York, July 1, 1876; interest coupons payable annually, on the 1st day of July, $1,200 each.

$10,000 Warsaw City (Ill.) 8-per-cent. Bonds, dated May 1, 1856, and due at the American Exchange Bank, in New-York, May 21, 1876; interest coupons payable Jan. and July 1, $1,000 each.

The above Bonds were issued in conformity with an Act of the State Legislature, authorizing the issue of Bonds to aid in the construction of the Warsaw and Rockford railroad. The amount of taxable property in the County, for the year 1856, was $6,308,949; taxes, $73,576; population, about 25,000; area in acres, 432,640. The authorized issue by the County is $100,000. The amount of taxable property in the city is $1,000,000; taxes, $9,036; population, 3,400. The authorized issue by the city is $50,000, and no more can be issued, by either the city or County, without an Act by the Legislature, and sanctioned by the people, so that every precaution has been taken to make these Bonds unquestionable, in point of security, and they cannot be repudiated, under any circumstances. Hancock County is one of the most prosperous in the State, and it is expected that 50 miles of the above railroad, from Warsaw to Ognawka Junction, will be finished and in full operation in sixty days from the present time. I have fully examined the strength of these securities, and I can recommend them to my friends and the public, with the utmost confidence believing that they will compare with anything in the market, and, for a permanent investment, no safer Bonds can be found. For a copy of the act under which these bonds were issued, and full particulars, apply to

The officers of the Bank having been duly authorized by the Board, hereby give notice that in accordance with such decision, and with the said articles, they will open books of subscription, and receive subscriptions, on the 15th day of June next, between the hours of 10 o'clock A. M. and 3 o'clock P. M., at the said Bank in the City of New-York, from all persons who shall appear to be registered on that day on the books of the Bank as shareholders in the said Continental Bank, in the proportion of one new share of the increased capital stock at par, to every three shares then held by them respectively.

The amount subscribed, and not paid at the time of subscription, will be payable on the 1st day of July next, when certificates will be issued.

Such portion of the additional 5,000 shares as shall not be taken by the shareholders within ten days after the said 15th day of June, will be disposed of for the benefit of the Association.

The Police Commissioners—Discharge of Chief Russell and Hart—Reappointments.

Mayor WOOD and City Judge RUSSELL met on Friday last, in secret session, as Police Commissioners, and made some important changes in the department. They appointed MIKE MURRAY Captain of the First Ward Police in place of MICHAEL HALPIN, whose term of office expired some months since. Dismissed Chief RUSSELL of the Thirteenth Ward, and appointed WILLIAM WEEKS in his place, and appointed WM. H. MANSFIELD Captain of the Seventeenth District, in place of HART, whose term of office had expired. Besides this, they re-appointed some twelve or fifteen policemen.

REMOVALS.

APPOINTMENTS.

First Ward.—Mike Murray, to be Captain, vice Michael Halpin, whose term has expired; Cornelius Dwyer, vice Thomas Stark, time expired.

Second Ward.—John Keogh, reappointed; Edward Coughlan, reappointed.

Fourth Ward.—R. Hannahan, re-appointed.

Fifth Ward.—Samuel S. Slater, re-appointed.

Sixth Ward.—Ready Ryan, vice L. W. Pierce, dismissed; Thomas Wallace, vice Chas. Heath, resigned.

Ninth Ward.—Captain Ackerman, re appointed.

Tenth Ward.—O. Oliver, re-appointed.

Thirteenth Ward.—Wm. Fisher Weeks, appointed Captain, in place of Captain Russell, dismissed; John Gerrah, re-appointed.

Fifteenth Ward.—Captain Dilks, re-appointed.

Seventeenth Ward.—Wm. H. Mansfield, vice Captain Hart, whose term expired, to be Captain; Anthony Hays, vice Nelson Mott, time expired.

Other Wards.—Evans, Fifth Ward, detailed to the foot of Jay-street; Sol. Barnard, detailed to City Judge's Court.

The Board adjourned, at 10 o'clock A. M., till Monday.

MIKE MURRAY, the new Captain of the First Ward, is the head of the Woodites in his district. He keeps a drinking-house in Greenwich-street, known as "The Crib," where all the faithful congregate. He is well known about town.

FISHER WEEKS, of the Thirteenth Ward, is at present in the Custom House. He formerly kept a porter-house, and is said to "rule" the Thirteenth Ward. He has ever been a warm advocate of Mayor Wood and his policy.

WILLIAM H. MANSFIELD, appointed in place of Captain HART of the Seventeenth Ward is a Councilman. He was formerly a detailed officer at the Tombs Police Court, but more recently kept a butcher's shop in the Bowery. He was until quite recently an avowed opponent of the Mayor.

Captain DILKS of the Fifteenth Ward and Alderman of the Ninth Ward were re-appointed. The former was understood to favor the American party, but it is said he exhibited affidavits to show that he "stood by" his honor at this last election.

When the appointments had been made, Captain DILKS invited a select few of his brother captains, including WEEKS and MANSFIELD, to Delmonico's, where all had a jolly time. Captain LEONARD, of the Second Ward, presided, and FERNANDO WOOD was toasted repeatedly in flowing bumpers.

It is understood that the Commissioners will, at their meeting to-day, fill up all vacancies, and take decided action upon all decisions reserved.

Woven Skirts at Sing Sing Prison.

The contract lately awarded by the State Prison Inspectors, to Messrs. DANIEL SPEWARD and AUGUSTUS SMITH for the manufacture of skirts and netting at the prison, dates from the 1st inst., and covers a period of five years. From 50 to 100 convicts will be employed at this work. No machinery will be used other than looms, by which the articles will be woven much in the same way as carpets. The contractors will occupy a building formerly used for stone-cutting in the South range of shops. The weaving has not yet commenced, as considerable time is required to prepare apparatus, and put it in working order. Mr. SMITH has already had experience in the prison as a carpet contractor, and Mr. STEWARD recently filled the office of head keeper.

☞ The assessors have applied to the Board of Supervisors to have their pay increased, and made uniform at $700. They are now getting $450 to $650. Seven hundred dollars are paid in Brooklyn. The labors of the assessors vary, but they are probably employed on an average some three or four months in the year.

☞ Mr. HENRY WOOD is going to erect on the site of the old Lyceum of Natural History, in Broadway, (which is fast coming down,) a four-story, white-marble-front edifice for the Christy and Wood Minstrels. The lot is 50 by 200 feet, extending back to Mercer-street.

☞ Ex-Alderman HERRICK has been sworn in as Naval Storekeeper at Brooklyn. As bondsman he gave Councilman BRYAN MCCAHILL and JAMES HINES, who have justified in the sum of $20,000 each.

☞ Yesterday the Episcopal and Catholic churches were decorated with flowers, and the opening was inaugurated of Easter festivities.

☞ Henceforth a mail is to be sent over the Erie Railroad on Sunday, leaving New-York at 1½ P. M.

Hudson River Railroad.

SUPREME COURT—SPECIAL TERM—APRIL 11.

Before Hon. Justice Mitchell.

ALLOWANCE BEFORE JUDGMENT.

Herrick vs. Dyos.—This suit was brought on a promissory note, and an attachment issued. The defendant, before answer, tendered the amount claimed with interest, $7 costs and disbursements. The plaintiff claimed allowance, which the defendant denied his obligation to pay. The case was taken to the Special Term on a motion for allowance. His Honor stated that the General Term had decided that an allowance was proper in all attachment cases before and after judgment, and therefore granted the motion with $25 allowance.

HALLOTYPES.—We think no discovery in art heretofore put in practice, holds comparison with the recently introduced method which produces the most life like portraits by means of the camera. Every variety of color is full introduced into the picture by this delightful process, and the likeness thus produced bears such a close resemblance to the finest and most elaborate paintings upon ivory, that the most skillful and experienced artists have frequently been puzzled to detect the difference when they have been placed before them at GURNEY'S GALLERY. Those who have not seen these inimitable specimens of Hallotypes, should go at once and take a stroll through GURNEY'S elegant rooms, at No. 349 Broadway, corner of Leonard-street. They will well be repaid for their trouble. GURNEY'S rooms are hung from ceiling to floor with the most exquisite works of art conceivable, and throngs of visitors go and come daily, free of charge, to look at the endless variety of beautiful faces there exhibited. And what is more, we hear of no dissenting voices, all being unanimous in the opinion that the Hallotype process exceeds all others.

PURDY'S NATIONAL THEATRE.—Another great attraction is to be presented at this popular place of amusement for this evening, being no less than a Drama from SYLVANUS COBB'a great story just published in that Queen of Weeklies, The New-York Ledger, entitled "Karmel the Scout," dramatized in full and to the completion of the story by that very successful dramatist MR. L. L. AIKEN, and placed under the immediate direction of Mr. G. L. FOX, stage manager. In addition to the above we are to have the mirth-provoking pantomime of the "Golden Axe," and the thrilling Irish Drama of "Norah Creina." Secure your seats in advance.

☞ Mild operation with successful effect are the peculiarity of BRANDRETH'S PILLS. Now that we may soon expect genial Spring, it is of great importance that a few doses be used by the wise. Our race are subject to a redundancy of vitiated bile at this season, and it is as dangerous as it is prevalent; but BRANDRETH'S PILLS afford an invaluable and efficient protection. By their occasional use, we prevent the collection of those impurities which, when in sufficient quantities, cause so much danger to the fine organs of the stomach and bowels. MONDAY, April 13—A. M.

The European mails by the Niagara, at Boston from Liverpool, Saturday, March 28, were delivered at the New-York Post-Office, yesterday morning. The circular advices all speak of the interruption to trade by the pending general election throughout Great Britain. The Cotton market was dull, though the daily sales, mostly to consumers, were equal to an average of 7,000 bales a day, say 43,290 bales for the week. On the lower descriptions ⅛d.@¼d. decline was submitted to by sellers, while Orleans fair is still quoted 8⅝d., and Upland fair 7⅞d. The authorized figure for Orleans middling was 7 13-16d., and Upland middling 7 9-16d. The latest advices from this side had little or no influence on the market. They reported, however, a falling off in receipts of only 115,000 bales. The deficit has since run up to 300,000 bales. The grain trade was lower by 2d.@3d. on Wheat, and 6d.@1s. on Flour. The extreme quotations for Indian Corn 30s.@32s. the quarter. The British Board of Trade returns for February show the extraordinary increase of $7,940,000 in the export of British manufactures over the same month last year, making the increase of $13,355,000 since January 1. The total of the two months is $91,855,000, against $78,500,000 the first two months of 1856. Cotton fabrics participate very largely in the February increase, the total for the month of Goods and Yarns being $15,220,000, against $13,620,000 in February, 1856. In contrast with this, the stock of all descriptions of raw Cotton in Liverpool, on the 27th March, was 384,330, against 377,160 bales same time last year. The stock of American alone was 276,400, against 255,110 bales same time in 1856. The money accounts from London show an unsettled Money market during the week, comparative ease and stringency alternating from day to day, but the supply at the price, 6 to 6¾ per cent. for discounts, adequate at the close. The feature of the market is the continued firmness of the 3 per cent. Funds, to carry over which the speculators for a further rise were paying double the interest borne by these securities, denoting a large confidence in the prosperity of trade, and the peace and right Government of the Kingdom. The elections were likely to result largely in favor of Lord PALMERSTON, in whom the leading and fashionable circles appear to repose much trust for a wise administration. Another point in the market is the soundness of the movement of the English Bank, so far as the reserve of bullion is concerned. The return of the 21st of March, shows an increase of $120,000, notwithstanding some important withdrawals for the Continent. In the succeeding week, the withdrawals were larger, but the London Times remarks that the effect of these constant movements is partially counteracted "by a gradual influx of sovereigns from Constantinople and other quarters." The English railways were improving on the Stock Exchange, and the traffic returns since the 1st of January show a small but uniform increase over the previous year. The London and Eastern Joint Stock Bank, the North of Europe Steamship Company, and the Australian Agricultural Company were in serious trouble from gross mismanagement and unpardonable if not corrupt partiality. The Eastern Bank had loaned £280,000, or $40,000 more than the capital to, its own Directors. The French Funds had reached to 70.50@70.65, while the general report of the Paris money market is favorable, and the intimation thrown out that no further contracts will be entered into by the Bank of France for the purchase of Gold, Credit Mobilier shares stand 1,462 francs for 500 francs paid up. The French Railways are well sustained. In the American Funds the London quotations by telegraph, heretofore published, are a day later than our circulars. Mr. SAITKRATHWAITE writes:

Transactions in American Securities have been limited during the past week. Some considerable lots of Illinois Central Shares have, however, changed hands at a slight advance. We note also some fair transactions in Construction Bonds at 90¾@91, ex coupon. Freelands are offered at 110 without business.) We note some small transactions in Michigan Central Shares and Bonds, and in New York Central Shares, and 6 ₱ cent. Bonds, at a slight advance for the Bonds of both Companies, and in Erie Sinking Fund Bonds at the full rates of last week. Michigan Southern Sinking Fund Bonds have brought 74, and Pennsylvania Second Sterling Bonds 86.

Messrs. ROBERT BENSON & Co. report:

The transactions in American Securities have been limited. The business has comprised New-York Central Railroad 6 ₱ cent. Bonds, at 93 ₱ cent.: Michigan Central Bonds of 1869 at 92¾; Pennsylvania 1st Mortgage at 89; Illinois Central Construction Bonds at 91 ex coupon, and some considerable purchases of the shares of this Company at 84¾@84¾ premium; Michigan Southern and Northern Indiana Sinking Fund Bonds have changed hands at 78. Attempts are being made to negotiate £225,000 7 ₱ cent. 2d Mortgage Sterling Bonds of the Panama Railroad; also, some Hannibal and St. Joseph Railroad 7 ₱ cent. Mortgage Bonds at 75 ₱ cent., (4s. 6d.)

And Messrs. BARING BROTHERS say:

There is little business, and little variation in prices, either of State or Railroad Securities. Some Pennsylvania State Inscriptions have been sold at 77, and some Pennsylvania Railroad 1st Mortgage Bonds at 89. An issue of Panama Railroad 2d Mortgage Bonds for £225,000, bearing 7 ₱ cent. interest, payable half-yearly, 15th April and 15th October, principal to be repaid in 15 years, is offered at 86. Canada 6s in demand at 112.

The return from the Bank of England for the week ending the 21st of March gives the following results, when compared with the previous week:—

Public deposits	£2,906,791	Increase...£239,303
Other deposits	9,902,845	Increase.. 103,988
Rest	8 818,985	Increase.. 18 531
Government securities	£11,646,018	Decrease.. 50,715
Other securities	19,098,712	Incr-ase... 423,569
Notes unemployed	5,480,720	Decrease....51,540

The amount of notes in circulation is £18,584,440, being an increase of £67,085, and the stock of bullion in both departments is £10,822,297, showing an increase of £24,632, when compared with the preceding return.

The Foreign Trade at the port of New-York the past week, again shows a diminished import as compared with the corresponding season last year. The total of the entries of the week, including the Dry Goods table in our last paper, is $3,608,777, against $5,257,832, the week ending 12th April, last year. On the other hand, the clearances of Domestic Produce and Miscellaneous Goods amount to $1,954,426 against $1,127,099 the corresponding week in 1856. The European steamers from this port and Boston carried out no Specie. The reëxport of Spanish and other Coin (received here at the close of the previous week from Europe,) to the West Indies, amounted to $468,697. The Sub-Treasury balance on Saturday afternoon, stood $15,174,799 against $15,289,566 at the close of the previous week. Altogether the Specie movements of the week were of little importance to the Bank reserve, the increase of which on the official statement to be made up this afternoon is not likely to vary essentially from the previous average of $11,538,732. The California Gold and Mail packet of the 20th March is about due at this port, and may be looked for in the course of this day or to-morrow.

According to the Custom-House returns, which we published a few days since, in tabular form by months, the entries of foreign goods at the port of New-York, (exclusive of Bullion,) for the nine months of the fiscal or treasury year, from the 1st of July, 1856, to 31st March, 1857, inclusive, Amounted to.....$166,877,000

* These items were included in miscellaneous goods, in our export statement every week of last year. Hence, no exact furnish comparative figures, in detail, this year. Next year we shall be enabled to do so regularly, by keeping up the record as now arranged through the current year.

The Money report for the past week has been almost uniformly satisfactory. Each day has developed evidences of increasing comfort in the supply of means both on temporary loan and in the way of discounts. There is no marked cheapening of terms, nor do we look for much change in this respect while the rates keep up in Europe, and particularly in England; but at 7 ₱ cent. on call, and 7@9 ₱ cent. for prime discounts, (the inside figure being as yet confined to Bank,) the market promises fair for several months to come. The Foreign exchanges have at length reached 109 ₱ cent. on London, as against 109½ ₱ cent. this time last year, but the chances of a further advance, as the shipping season at the South draws to a close, are not such as to indnce a large business at the present rates, or to create concern in reference to the shipments of Specie. These will most likely soon be increased to Europe, as usual in May or June, but without affecting the price of a supply of money, or materially disturbing the Bank reserve. The Gold exchanges with the South and West, and the receipts from California through the next three months, will, at least, equalize the export demand, and no apprehension is felt about the accumulation in the Sub-Treasury this side the 1st July. After that time the New Tariff will call for increased cash duties, while, on the other hand, the new and enlarged budget of Government expenditures for the fiscal year, 1857-58, will begin to tell upon the disbursements of the Treasury.

VOL. VI.....NO. 1737 NEW-YORK, TUESDAY, APRIL 14, 1857. PRICE TWO CENTS.

IMPORTANT FROM NEW-GRANADA.

THE AMERICAN ULTIMATUM REJECTED.

Departure of Mr. Morse from Bogota.

Belligerent Tone of the New-Granadian Press.

Correspondence of the New-York Daily Times.

PANAMA, Friday, April 3, 1857.

The half-monthly mail from Bogota, which left that capital on the 6th ultimo, brings us the important intelligence that our agents, Mr. BOWLIN and Mr. MORSE have completely failed in all their propositions and demands, and that the New Granadian Government has granted the latter his passports. The negotiations were finally broken off on the 28th February. Our agents were informed that their propositions for the cession of territory, or for intervention in the Government of the Isthmus, were simply insulting. Mr. MORSE, whose first money demand was $400,000, then presented his ultimatum, which was for $400,000, "and nothing more." To this, the Secretary of State replied promptly, and of this I have information that is indisputable, that New-Granada would not only not pay a dollar, but that she would demand from the United States indemnity for outrages toward her own citizens, both on the occasion of the 15th of April events, and on former occasions. Upon this declaration, Mr. MORSE, after uttering a few threats of consequences, broke up the interview, notifying the Secretary that he would leave Bogota within forty-eight hours, and that Mr. BOWLIN would soon follow him. Mr. MORSE left on the 8th, and, according to letters in town, but which I do not get from my own letters, was insulted by the bootings and hissings of the populace on his exit. He will be in Washington about the 30th of April. Mr. BOWLIN writes to friends here that all the propositions were insultingly rejected, and that the bad feeling that exists against the United States in Bogota, and on the part of the Government, is principally due to the falsifications of the Consuls at Panama, particularly those of Count NOLLENT, the French Consul, Mr. PERRY, British Consul, and Señor RUBIO, Consul of Peru. Mr. POMBO also positively asserts that he has in his possession a letter from our late Consul, Colonel THOMAS W. WARD, in which the latter admits that most of the evidence he took here in the 15th of April business, was from interested sources, and is greatly exaggerated. Although Mr. POMBO asserted this more than once in the interview with our agents, I can scarcely believe that Colonel WARD although he left Panama cross with the Railroad Company, with his own Government, and with everybody else, would have made a declaration so damaging to himself; as he, at the time, warmly indorsed the whole of the evidence which it is now said he disputes. He owes it to his own reputation to refute this charge at once.

I must say, that although all the information we have here, both public and private, concur in the statement that Mr. MORSE'S ultimatum was unaccompanied by any stipulations for the future government of the transit route, I do not place implicit confidence in it. The payment of a sum of money by the National Government does not afford any guarantee for the future safety of the route. The punishment of the criminals, and municipal control by the Government of the United States of the termini and line of the road, can only do that.

The papers consider that Señor POMBO has obtained a great victory over the United States, from the fact that his demands have been reduced to a mere money payment; and well they may, if this be so. "The question has narrowed itself down, as is always the case in Yankee negotiations, to one of dollars!" they exclaim.

A bill had been introduced into the Senate at Bogota to provide for the sending of 300 men to Panama, but was strongly opposed on the ground that if they were meant for resistance to the United States there should be thousands instead of hundreds; and that the bill apparently only contemplated making this little force a nucleus from which to institute a standing army which New Granada had but lately abolished.

The feeling here on the part of the natives on the first receipt of the news, was very exultant, in view of the defiant tone of the Secretary of State towards our Minister and Commissioner. Some of the less sensible talked loudly about a war that would learn the Yankees a lesson that would prevent further attempts at robberies upon their neighbors; and were for driving us all immediately from the city. But the indisposition of the Senate to send a military force here has begun to have its effect; and a few fools met a day or two since, denounced the course of the Government at Bogota in not affording them protection, and then seriously discussed the project of offering the Isthmus to Old Spain!

Some hold the opinion here that Mr. BUCHANAN will send another Commissioner to Bogota. Under the circumstances, I do not see how he can do it. However well disposed the Administration of OSPINA may be to arrange matters, the public mind has now become so much inflamed against us, that he would not dare to accede to any terms that would be satisfactory to the United States. Unless the New-Granadian Government shall invite a renewal of negotiations, it is not at all probable any further ones will take place. It becomes, then, the duty of the American Government to take immediate steps to make this transit secure from any more such massacres as that of the 15th of April. And in view of the present state of feeling among the people—always excepting a few families of the better class—and of the fact that the State Government is in the hands of the same men, FABREGA included, who ordered and justified the murder of our citizens, I would not be at all astonished if a further loss of life should be the consequence of procrastination on the part of the Government at Washington.

As the Press of New-Granada faithfully reflects public opinion, I have translated three or four articles from journals at the capital, and one from the Opinion, a paper lately established at Santa Marta, which you may find worthy of reproduction in the columns of the TIMES.

MISCELLANEOUS NEWS.

The bill before Congress for the settlement of the Mackintosh claim would probably become a law, but it was doubted if its terms would be satisfactory to the British Government.

The French Treaty had been read a third time in the Senate. I do not find in my papers any statement as to its provisions.

The bill for the project of a Columbian Confederation had been amended so as to change the title to Confederation Granadina.

The convention between Señor GUSTO AROSEMENA, on the part of the Mexican Government or its Assignees, and the Executive of New-Granada, by which the latter agrees to pay Mexico $450,000 for moneys loaned to carry on the revolution against Spain, has been almost unanimously rejected in the House of Representatives. Congress admits the claim, but puts in an offset for aid in fitting out a fleet to assist Mexico in the reduction of San Juan de Ulloa. As the debt has been assigned to a British subject, it is feared that Britain will enforce its payment.

President OSPINA had started from his home for Bogota to assume the reins of Government, but his whereabouts was not known, he having gone a round-about way, for fear of assassination.

Padre VIJIL, WALKER'S late Minister to Washington, has been given the curacy of Mompos by Bishop MEDINA, of Carthagena. The Padre commenced his ministrations by denouncing the follies of his new people in the matters of dress and the cock-pit, which greatly astonished them—it being the first intimation they had ever had that cock fighting and crinoline were cardinal sins. The papers are down on him as a filibuster, and blame the Bishop for appointing him.

PANAMA ITEMS.

We are all much pleased to hear of the promotion of Commander BAILEY to a captaincy. By his firm and judicious conduct here, while in the command of the St. Mary's, he won the confidence of every American, and the respect of all the better classes of the population. If our distinguished Commodore of the Independence should unfortunately take it into his head to leave us, please return us Capt. BAILEY.

The projected invasion of Mexico by Spain is looked upon with much interest here. Why cannot the United States contrive to mix itself in the matter, and then seize upon Cuba? Or what a splendid point d'appui Mexico would be for WALKER and his "filibustering gang" in an attack upon the Queen of the Antilles.

The dozen church bells of Panama set up an awful clangor at the unusual hour of half past four in the afternoon of yesterday. On inquiring the cause, I learned that a man was to be shot for assassination. No doubt he deserved his fate; but the sensitive would much rather the executioner's terrible shadow had not passed so directly before their vision.

FEYTON MIDDLETON, Esq., Special Inspector of United States Customs at Panama, will report to the Treasury Department the value of foreign and domestic goods as having come under his inspection from New-York for California for the quarter ending March 31, as follows: Domestic, $367,235 80; Foreign, $69,268 94—Total, $936,504 74.

Threats having been made of obstructing the freight trains on the Panama Railroad, Com. MERVINE will send a force to-day to accompany the treasure, and will detail a force each fortnight in future for that purpose, if it is judged necessary.

Com. MERVINE has refused permission to his officers to come on shore in future—fearing, it is said, that they may get into some altercations with the natives

Yesterday, at 5 o'clock P. M., we had the first heavy shower of the season. The rain fell in torrents for the space of half an hour.

The officers and crew relieved from the Decatur go to New-York to-day. Capt. THATCHER, who takes command of the Decatur, is a most gentlemanly officer, and will be a great gain to the society of Panama.

REJECTION OF MR. MORSE'S PROPOSITIONS RELATIVE TO THE PANAMA MASSACRE—BELLIGERENT ATTITUDE OF THE GOVERNMENT AND PEOPLE OF NEW-GRANADA—FOREIGN AID TO BE SOUGHT AGAINST THE UNITED STATES—HIGH TALK FROM BOGOTA JOURNALS, &C.

From El Tiempo, Feb. 24.

It is more than probable that the solution will not be a pacific one. The terms of the demands do not lead us to hope for it. Everything seems to concur in bringing about a disruption between the two Republics the most identical in their form of government, and who, for so many reasons, ought to remain friends. This will be a deplorable thing, not simply because New-Granada is infinitely inferior in strength to the United States, not because the theatre of the struggle would be our own territory, where we shall have to submit to prolonged and cruel sacrifices, for the reason that being bound to defend our own rights and dignity, we must not contemplate the consequences, but go straightforward with our eyes shut to them; but it is to be lamented because it will engender antipathies that will likely be perpetuated to the great damage of the political and industrial interests of the whole of the New World.

Up to the present time the Republicans of Spanish America have always had a steadfast hope in the people of WASHINGTON, of FRANKLIN and JEFFERSON, who have given such merited currency to liberal institutions, drawing from them instruction, example and support: the North-American confederacy has been our light and our guide, and we had hoped that honorably practising the doctrine of MONROE, its people would serve as our protectors when Europe should attempt to force its institutions upon us, or to snatch from us the least particle of our territory. At the head of the nations of the New World, and possessing institutions with so many practicable advantages, the United States seemed destined to be the champion of justice and right, as the base of civilization on this continent; and in this light the sympathies and confidence of the intelligent patriots in Spanish America should be, as regards her, fervent and without qualification. But what would follow from the moment when we could only consider her as one of the most dangerous of the tyrannies that could subjugate us? The doctrine of MONROE, regarded up to the present as a bond of fraternity and strong union between the people of this continent, would be at once condemned as a selfish thought, and nothing more: because it excludes us from European influence only that we may the more easily fall a prey to our powerful neighbor.

LOOKING TO EUROPE FOR PROTECTION.

In this latter view of the case we should at once divest ourselves of our illusions, and prepare for a terrible struggle, looking to Europe for alliance or sympathy. * * * * England, from her liberal institutions, and from the currency that Free Trade has lately obtained in her councils, is a power with which we might place ourselves in firm alliance, for the reason that our interests take the same direction. The talent of our statesmen should be enlisted to bring about this result. At first sight, our natural alliance was, as indicated above, with the United States. Yet when it is once understood that the doctrine of MONROE, which says: "America for all the Americans under the banner of Republicanism and Justice," means simply "America for the Anglo Americans, and for nobody else," then our natural course is to ally ourselves with the people of Europe, who only ask from us guarantees for its subjects and its trade, which it is always our interest and disposition to give. This should be made the base of our international treaties. To give to Europe an interest in the preservation of Spanish-American nationalities, should be the culminating point of New-Granadian foreign policy.

From the Neo Granadino, March 3.

In future the press cannot and ought not discuss for a moment whether we can barter our sovereignty, independence, dignity or territory. Such acts would be so infamous, so outrageous, so absurd, that they not admit of the least consideration with any Granadino of honor or patriotism.

If the Yankees wish Panama let them take it by force, if they can. But they can never plant themselves on the Isthmus, or on any other part of our territory, with our consent, be it as absolute masters, or be it with especial privileges of administration or intervention. The people of New-Granada will live, if they can live, in independence and with honor; otherwise they will disappear from the list of sovereign nations. They know how to fight, and how to die, when necessary. Their traditions, their present and their future, may exact the sacrifice. But they will never submit to the ignominy of filibuster barbarism. * * * Our readers know the profound sensation the proposition of Mr. MORSE created—how alarmed the country was by such outrageous exactions. The popular indignation has been unanimous; and the agents of the North Americans are fully aware that their pretensions are scouted by the whole people. * * * * The Executive declared, in the initiative, that discussion in respect to concession or sales of territory, was impossible; and it denied roundly the right of the United States to any indemnity in the affair of the 15th April. Then the agents of the United States exhibited their ultimatum, exacting $400,000 in money, and some concession upon the right of intervention on the Isthmus. The ultimatum was rejected; and it is reported that our Government then presented a counter claim for damages against the United States. Upon this, the two Ministers declared negotiations broken off; and Mr. MORSE, after breathing a few threats, prepared to quit the country, announcing that Mr. BOWLIN, Minister Resident, would soon follow him.

Such is the generally received version of matters that have transpired in Ministerial regions. In view of these facts, it is necessary that Congress, as well as the whole country, should know the exact situation of affairs; so that if our legislators shall consider the Republic in danger, they can take the necessary steps; so that the people may prepare for the struggle, however unequal it may be; so that the Executive place itself on its guard, and dismiss all the agents of every class which the United States maintains amongst us; so that the press may consider the matter in all its aspects; so that the civilized world can appreciate our acts, and judge of our cause; and that our diplomatic agents, energetically supported by public opinion, may take such steps as will give us the support of foreign nations on the maintenance of our rights and interests.

Such is the duty of a patriotic Administration. Public opinion is in expectation of such a policy. Every body wishes to know the whole truth; and the course of the Government in withholding it, is unjustifiable to the last degree. Let Mr. MORSE go, with the proper reproof and warning. Let Mr. BOWLIN have his passports, if he wishes them. Let Mr. CORWINE abandon his rôle in Panama, either willingly or by force. But let us have the precise situation of affairs, and that promptly.

From La Opinion of Santa Martha.

New-Granada must appeal to the sword as the only means to arrest the ambition of the filibustering Government at Washington. * * * * We know that we are weaker, but we are more valiant than they. And as we beat the Spaniards, notwithstanding the sympathies of custom, language, and religion that bound us to them, we can the more easily beat this degenerate race, who, far from having any sympathies in common with us, we detest for their arrogance, their inordinate ambition, and their lax morality. * * * We are ashamed to acknowledge that WALKER has maintained himself for eighteen months against five States, in the heart of Nicaragua, at the head of only 800 men, without discipline, without military subordination, without homogeneousness of language, some being Yankees, some German, and some Swiss. Were it not to offend the amour propre of our Central American brothers, we would send them a battalion of 200 men, who would whip these incendiaries, murderers and robbers in the first encounter, or chase them from the country.

THE BURDELL ESTATE.

The Testimony of the Misses Cunningham.

DIRECT PROOF OF THE MARRIAGE.

Exceedingly Interesting Facts Elicited.

SURROGATE'S COURT—APRIL 13.

This case which was postponed on the 26th of March last was again resumed, yesterday evening, at 10½ o'clock. A dense crowd filled the apartment, which is only about twenty feet square. The two daughters of Mrs. Cunningham (Burdell) were present as witnesses.

Miss Helen Cunningham was first sworn and examined—her sister, Augusta, in the meanwhile, retiring into the other apartment at the request of counsel. The direct examination was conducted by Gilbert Dean, Esq.

Q.—Where is your residence? A.—No. 31 Bond-st.

Q.—You are the daughter of Mrs. Cunningham that was—now Mrs. Burdell. A.—Yes, Sir.

Surrogate—We will put it down: "I am the daughter of the claimant."

Q.—Your age? A.—Sixteen.

Q.—Were you living at No. 31 Bond-st., most of the Summer and Fall? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—You knew Dr. Burdell? A.—Yes, Sir.

Mr. Dean here took a ring from his pocket-book, and handed it to the witness. The surrogate first examined it, and then the counsel on the other side. It was a plain gold ring, with no engraving upon it.

Q.—[Handing the ring to witness]—Have you seen that before? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Where, and under what circumstances, did you first see that ring? A.—It was in the morning that Dr. Burdell came up stairs into mother's room, handed it to her, and put it on her finger.

Q.—Were you home in the latter part of October last? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Do you remember any occasion in which Dr. Burdell went out with any members of your family? If so, please state with whom and under what circumstances? A.—It was on the 28th of October; it was in the afternoon that mother was dressing in her room; she said she was going out with the Doctor.

Mr. Edwards—The Doctor was not present then? A.—No, Sir, he was not.

Q.—Just state what occurred that evening in which they went out together? A.—I think it was very near 8 o'clock, between 7 and 8, that mother came down into the parlor; she and the Doctor both came in together; mother came to about the centre of the room and the Doctor leaned against one of the pillars by the folding doors; she then said she was going out with the Doctor, and that the suits had all been withdrawn and everything was settled; and that was the 28th day of October.

Q.—What did they do then? A.—Mother went out of the room and the Doctor with her.

Q.—Any one else? A.—Yes, Sir, Augusta was there too, she was standing near the door in the hall.

Q.—Did they go out separately or together? A.—They went out together.

Q.—The three? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Was Mr. Eckel at that time boarding or staying there in the house? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Where was he at the time they went out? A.—He was in his room.

Q.—Did he go out with them? A.—No, Sir.

Q.—Do you know what became of him during the evening while they were out? A.—He was coming up from tea and came into the parlor and told me if a gentleman called that evening to see him, to send him to his room.

Q.—Did any one call? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Did he go up stairs? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Do you know how long he remained up stairs? A.—I think it must have been two hours.

Q.—Do you recollect when your mother came back that night? A.—No, Sir; the only thing I know regarding her coming back, I heard some one in the hall; I went to the banister and looked over, and saw my mother, Augusta and the Doctor.

Q.—Did you hear anything when they were conversing together? A.—Yes, Sir; the Doctor said something, and they were both laughing when they came up.

Q.—Who do you mean by both? A.—Augusta and mother.

Q.—Can you tell how long they were down stairs after they came in before Augusta came up? A.—I cannot say how long.

Q.—Do you know whether the Doctor soon after this time, or a short time before, went to Saratoga or not? A.—I think he went the following Friday or Saturday.

Q.—About how many? A.—About three or four or five days.

Q.—Did it begin the first day after your return? A.—I was taken sick the evening after I returned.

Q.—Were you able to dine with the family that afternoon? A.—I did not get home till about 6 o'clock in the evening, when I took my tea and went up stairs, and was taken sick that night.

Q.—Where did you sleep that night? A.—In the front room, third story.

Q.—With whom? A.—My mother.

Q.—Any one else? A.—No, Sir.

Q.—Did you sleep with your mother any other night after that one night? A.—Yes, Sir; I lay in her room all the time I was sick, confined to my bed.

Q.—That was three or four days? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—What physician attended you? A.—Dr. Baldwin.

Q.—Do you know what his address is? A.—A partner of Dr. Freeman, office at the corner of Nineteenth-street and Fourth-avenue.

Q.—Did you sleep with your mother anyother night after your recovery? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—What night? A.—I don't know exactly the night; I slept with her several nights after I recovered.

Q.—The same week? A.—No, Sir, not the same week.

Q.—The week after? A.—It might have been two weeks after.

Q.—Don't you know that he used formerly to occupy the room in which he was killed as a bedroom? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Don't you know he continued to do that until late in the cold weather? A.—Yes, I know he made a change.

Q.—When was that change made? A.—I do not know what time.

Q.—Don't you know it was not made till Winter? A.—I don't remember whether it was Winter or Fall.

Q.—Did she want you to remember that it had been settled? A.—No, Sir; she said she was going out with the Doctor; I was a little surprised, because she had not done it before since she had this trouble; I asked her if she was going out, she said she was, and it was the 28th of October.

Q.—What did she want you to remember? A.—She wanted me to remember the 28th of October.

Q.—Remember that there was such a day? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—You say the Doctor went to Saratoga soon after this event?

Surrogate—Out of town.

Q.—Do you know where he went? A.—I think it was Saratoga.

VERY LATE FROM MEXICO.

Reported Instructions to the U. S. Minister for the Negotiation of New Treaties—The New Constitution—Opposition from the Church—Navigation on the Pacific Coast—Bilbao—Preparations to resist California Filibusters, &c.

We are in possession of advices from the City of Mexico to the 3d, and from Vera Cruz to the 4th of April.

The new Constitution was being everywhere sworn to by the State Governments except at revolutionary Puebla.

The steamer Guerrero arrived at Vera Cruz on the 31st ult., with Mr. BUTTERFIELD on board, it is supposed, with important dispatches to Mr. FORSYTH, United States Minister to Mexico. Private letters at Vera Cruz, report that instructions were received by the Guerrero for Mr. FORSYTH, to make a new treaty or set of treaties.

The Comonfort Government was sustaining itself in the best manner it could. No open armed demonstration against the Government had taken place, although the clergy had denounced the Constitution openly in the pulpits. The friends of the Government were expecting some vigorous steps on the par of President COMONFORT. The failure of the treaties will no doubt force him to pursue a straightforward course.

Though the new Constitution is popular among the masses, it receives opposition from the church. It is said that the Government will punish the archbishop and other ecclesiastics who have raised their voices against the laws of the land. Upon this subject the Mexican Extraordinary, in its issue of the 28th ult., says:

"It is gratifying to observe the patriotic tone of the entire Mexican press in their observations regarding the singular refusal of some of the employes in the different Government offices, to take the required oath of fidelity to the new Constitution, which has now, by the almost unanimous voice of the people of Mexico, become the supreme law of the land. The conduct of these officials, whose very support is derived from the Government that they thus strive to overthrow, is condemned in the strongest terms, as well as the course pursued by the clergy, in not only refusing to recognize the Constitution, but also by impious appeals from the pulpit to prejudice the ignorant mass against it. The intelligent sentiment of the educated classes is warmly enlisted in favor of at least giving a fair trial to a Constitutional Government, and we are informed from high authority that it is the intention of President COMONFORT to insist with the utmost firmness upon at least the neutrality and outward respect of the entire clergy, from the highest official down, towards the Constitution and the Government under it. And if their position absolves them from taking an active part in favor of the present order of things, their presence in the country will not be tolerated if they descend from their sphere and take part against the Constitutional authorities. The President in course will not only meet with the approbation of all good citizens of Mexico, but also add to his already high reputation abroad."

It is stated that the Government has concluded a contract with Captain I. B. G. ISHAM, an American gentleman, for the navigation of the Pacific coast by a line of first-class steamers. By the terms of the contract, the Company, of which Captain ISHAM is the head, has the exclusive privilege of navigating, by steamers, the Mexican coast from Tuehuantepec to the western and northern line of its territory, including the Gulf of California. The first steamer is to be placed on the route within six months after the signing of the contract. Among other enterprises set on foot by Captain ISHAM are the working of the guano islands on the coast of Lower California and the survey of Soonora for the purpose of ascertaining the condition and value of certain large tracts of land owned by parties in Mexico City.

The Heraldo publishes an account of serious disorders at Tehuantepec, in which many were killed, and which have affected the operations on the Isthmus. A battalion of the Mexican National Guard left Oaxaca on the 13th of March for Tehuantepec.

The Conducta from Pachuca and Real del Monte arrived in the capital on the 25th of March, with upwards of 100 bags of silver, valued at about $150,000. The mines generally in that district are reported to be in a flourishing condition.

Many journals throughout the country have raised the name of Señor Don Isaaoro COMONFORT, the present active President, for election to the office of Chief Magistrate of the nation at the ensuing election.

In the State of Sinaloa extensive preparations were made for a strong resistance to the filibuster invasion from Alta California.

On the 17th of March the Gas Company commenced laying down pipes in the City of Mexico.

Mr. DENMAN, United States Consul at Acapulco, had been in the Capital, and left again on the 29th ult., for his post.

The Guadalupe Railroad is in an advanced stage. The road has been entirely graded, and the laying of the tracks would be commenced within a few days.

THE MORMONS.

Resignation of W. W. Drummond, Chief Justice of Utah.

Hon. Jeremiah S. Black, Attorney-General of the United States, Washington City, D. C.:

DEAR SIR: As I have concluded to resign my office of Justice of the Supreme Court of the Territory of Utah, which position I accepted in A.D. 1855, under the Administration of President PIERCE, I owe it due to the public to give some of the reasons why I do so. In the first place, BRIGHAM YOUNG, the present Governor of Utah Territory, is the acknowledged head of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, commonly called "Mormons," and as such the people look to him, and to him alone, for counsel, and they are to be governed, therefore, by his counsel. I believe that there is a secret oath bound organization among all the male members of the church, and to acknowledge no law save the law of the "Holy Priesthood," which comes to the people through BRIGHAM YOUNG, direct from God, he, YOUNG, being the vicegerent of God and prophetic successor of JOSEPH SMITH, who was the founder of this blind and unreasonable organization.

Thirdly. I am fully aware that there is a set of men set apart by special order of the church to take both the lives and property of persons who may question the authority of the church, (the names of whom I will promptly make known at a future time.)

Fourthly. That the records, papers, &c., of the Supreme Court have been destroyed by order of the church, with direct knowledge and approbation of Governor B. YOUNG, and the federal officers grossly insulted for presuming to raise a single question about the treasonable act.

Fifthly. That the federal officers of the Territory are constantly insulted, harassed and annoyed by the Mormons, and for those insults there is no redress.

Sixthly. That the federal officers are daily compelled to hear the form of the American government traduced, the chief executives of the nation, both living and dead, slandered and abused from the masses, as well as from all the leading members of the church, in the most vulgar, loathsome and wicked manner that the evil passions of man can possibly conceive.

Again: That after MORONI GREEN had been convicted in the District Court before my colleague, Judge KINNEY, of an assault with intent to commit murder; and afterwards, on appeal to the Supreme Court the judgment being affirmed and the said GREEN sentenced to the penitentiary, BRIGHAM YOUNG gave a full pardon to the said GREEN before he reached the penitentiary; also, that the said Gov. YOUNG pardoned a man by the name of BOREN, who had been tried and sentenced to ten years' imprisonment in the penitentiary for the murder of a dumb boy by the name of WHITE HOUSE, the proof showing one of the most aggravated cases of murder that I ever knew being tried; and to insult the Court and Government officers, this man YOUNG took this pardoned criminal with him, in proper person, to church on the next Sabbath after his conviction. BAKER in the meantime having received a full pardon from Gov. BRIGHAM YOUNG. These two men were Mormons.

On the other hand, I charge the Mormons, and Gov. YOUNG in particular, with imprisoning five or six young men from Missouri and Iowa, who are now in the Penitentiary of Utah, without those men having violated any criminal law in America; but they were Anti-Mormons, poor, uneducated young men, on their way for California; but because they emigrated from Illinois, Iowa or Missouri, and passed by Great Salt Lake City, they were indicted by a Probate Court, and most brutally and inhumanly dealt with, in addition to being summarily incarcerated in the saintly prison of the Territory of Utah. I also charge Gov. YOUNG with constantly interfering with the Federal Courts, directing the Grand Jury whom to indict and whom not; and, after the Judges charge the Grand Juries as to their duties, that this man, YOUNG, invariably has some member of the Grand Jury advised in advance as to his will in relation to their labors, and that his charge thus given is the only charge known, obeyed or received by all the Grand Juries of the Federal Courts of Utah Territory.

Again, Sir, after a careful and mature investigation, I have been compelled to come to the conclusion, heart-rending and sickening as it may be, that Capt. JOHN W. GUNNISON and his party of eight others were murdered by the Indians in 1853, under the order, advice and direction of the Mormons; that my illustrious and distinguished predecessor, Hon. LEONIDAS SHAVER, came to his death by drinking poisonous liquors given to him under the order of this loving men of the Mormon Church in Great Salt Lake City; that the late Secretary of the Territory, A. W. BABBITT, was murdered on the Plains by a band of Mormon marauders, under the particular and special order of BRIGHAM YOUNG, HEBER C. KIMBALL and J. M. GRANT, and not by the Indians, as reported by the Mormons themselves; and that they were sent from Salt Lake City for that purpose, and that only; and as members of the Danite Band they were bound to do the will of B. YOUNG, as the head of the Church, or forfeit their own lives.

These reasons, with many others that I might give, which would be too heart-rending to insert in this communication, have induced me to resign the office of Justice of the Territory of Utah, and again return to my adopted State of Illinois. My reason, Sir, for making this communication thus public is, that the Democratic Party, with which I have always strictly acted, is the party now in power, and therefore is the party that should now be held responsible for the treasonable and disgraceful state of affairs that now exists in Utah Territory. I could, Sir, if necessary, refer to a cloud of witnesses to attest the reasons I have given, and the charges, bold as they are, against those despots who rule with an iron hand their hundred thousand souls out of that notable Territory, but shall not do so for the reason that the lives of such gentlemen as I should designate in Utah and in California would not be safe for a single day.

In conclusion, Sir, I have to say, that during my career as Justice of the Supreme Court of Utah Territory, I have the consolation of knowing that I did my duty; that neither threats nor intimidations drove me from that path; upon the other hand, I am pained to say, that I accomplished little good while there; that the Judiciary is only treated as a farce. The only rule of law by which the infatuated followers of this curious people will be governed is the law of the Church, and that emanates from Gov. BRIGHAM YOUNG, and him alone.

I do believe that, if there were a man put in office, as Governor of that Territory, who is not a member of the Church, (Mormon,) and be supported with a sufficient military aid, that much good would result from such a course; but, as the Territory is now governed, and has been since the Administration of Mr. FILLMORE, at which time YOUNG received his appointment as Governor, it is noon-day madness and folly to attempt to administer the law in that Territory. The officers are insulted, harassed, and murdered, for doing their duty, and not recognising BRIGHAM YOUNG as the only law-giver and law-maker on earth. Of this every man can bear incontestable evidence, who has been willing to accept an appointment in Utah, and I assure you, Sir, that no man would be willing to risk his life and property in that Territory, after once trying the sad experiment.

With an ardent desire that the present Administration will give due and timely aid to the officers that may be so unfortunate as to accept situations in that Territory, and that the withering curse which rests upon this nation, by virtue of the peculiar and heart-rending institutions of the Territory of Utah, may be speedily removed, to the honor and credit of our happy country,

I now remain your obedient servant,

W. W. DRUMMOND,
Justice of Utah Territory.

MARCH 30, A. D. 1857.

DECISIONS.

Hecker vs. De Groot, President of the Mechanics' Fire Insurance Company, et al.—The defendants are sued for damages occasioned by a fraud committed by them. It matters not in what capacity they acted, or with whom they cooperated. They were instrumental in perpetrating the acts constituting the fraud. This is admitted by the demurrer. If indeed a person is the unconscious instrument of others in committing an injury, he is not personally liable for the consequences; but where he knowingly engages in an unlawful course, either for his own immediate benefit or not, he cannot escape liability by averring that he acted as an agent.

The amount of damages is never the subject of demurrer. This is to be determined at the trial. Demurrer overruled with liberty to answer in 20 days on costs of term.

Tibbits vs. Blunt, et al.—The pleas are defective; but according to the suggestion of plaintiff's counsel, let the complaint be dismissed as against Ward and Glover. The same order can be entered as that in behalf of defendant Blunt. No costs to defendants.

Before Hon. Justice Roosevelt.

Dodge vs. Dodge.—There is no probability that the testator intended that the plaintiff should have both provisions. Yet as he has not said so in terms, and as there is no absolute incompatibility, she is entitled (under the authorities cited) to both, and is not obliged to elect. Judgment accordingly.

COMMON PLEAS—SPECIAL TERM—April 13.

Before Hon. Judge Ingraham.

Charles Piere vs. James M. Thompson.—Referred to Hamilton W. Robinson, Esq.

James Pollock vs. John Rocha.—Report of referee confirmed.

COURT OF GENERAL SESSIONS.

Before Hon. Recorder Smith.

At the opening of Court yesterday morning, two notorious burglars named Henry Wilson and John Evans, pleaded guilty to a charge of burglary in the third degree, and were sentenced to five years imprisonment in the State Prison.

A colored woman named Mary J. Dodge, pleaded guilty to a charge of petit larceny, and was sentenced to six months in the City Prison.

Henry Poppe, a German, pleaded guilty to an attempt at grand larceny and was sentenced to the State Prison for two years.

During the March term of this Court, two Germans, named Charles Boel and Justus Kohler, were placed on trial for a rape on a young woman 23 years old, named Hannah A. Cramer. On that occasion Miss Creamer refused to be sworn, and no persuasion of the District Attorney or the Judge could induce her to testify. Out of compassion to her situation, she being enceinte and very timid and bashful, the case was adjourned to the present term and came up yesterday. For a long time she again refused to be sworn, and it was not till the Recorder had several times assured her that he would be compelled to send her to prison, where she would have to remain till she consented to testify, that her obstinacy could be overcome. She at length took the oath, and very reluctantly gave the required evidence. It appeared from her testimony that she went in the evening of December 24, 1856, to the prisoner's grocery store, corner of Third-avenue and Eighty-second-street, to make a purchase, when Rosi tripped her up and committed the offence, in which he was followed by Kohler. The young woman's reluctance to testify seemed to have its origin in the circumstance that Kohler had offered to marry her. Her father, however, would not consent that Rosi should go unpunished, but had taken security from Kohler that he would marry her and treat her well, promising them to buy furniture for them when they were married. Kohler, nevertheless, was on trial yesterday. The case was adjourned to this morning, to give time for the production of a missing witness.

Mary Kearn and George Rump pleaded guilty to forgery in the fourth degree, and were sentenced—Kearn to two years in the Penitentiary, and Rump to two years in the State Prison.

John Brown, William O'Leary and Michael Sullivan, three youths, were tried for burglariously entering the store of Mr. Stukey, No. 86 Henry-street, on March 7. The testimony was clear against Brown and Sullivan, and Leary owned he was in their company, but denied any participation in the burglary. The Jury found them all guilty, and the Recorder sentenced O'Leary to two years in the Penitentiary, and Brown and Sullivan to three years in the State Prison.

There being no other cases ready, the Court adjourned to this morning.

Lauren.—The mountain forests of Pastoria are inhabited, it is said, by Fixies, Sprites and Elves, who, like the Phantom Dancers of Germany, delight to entrap travelers into their realms and torment them with their mischievous antics. Having the power of transferring the spirit, they often, in their malicious gambols, give life to the newly dead. Statues, rocks and trees are seen fantastically moving in the forest, but it is only during the day they retain their fictitious existence; at the approach of night they resume their impossibilities.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

The steamship George Law, from Aspinwall on the 8d inst., and with the California mail of the 23d of March, arrived yesterday morning. This trip from San Francisco has been performed in less than twenty-one days, being one of the shortest on record.

We receive, by this arrival, later news from San Juan del Norte. There was a rumor, which requires confirmation, that Col. LOCKRIDGE had taken Fort Castillo. Whether true or not, his prospects are not encouraging, for many of his men were sick; others were deserting whenever a chance offered; and, altogether, the force under his command is considered by our correspondent as on the eve of disbanding. No later intelligence is received from WALKER at Rivas. At Panama, where many opportunities offer for hearing the truth concerning his movements, nothing was known about his last reported victory, and it was generally believed to be a hoax.

Important news is received by the George Law, from New-Granada. The ultimatum of Commissioner MORSE, claiming specific damages for the Panama massacre, has been rejected in the most offensive manner by the New-Granadian Government. Our Commissioner, in consequence, demanded his passports and left Bogota on the 8th ult. Mr. BOWLIN, United States minister, intended to pursue a similar course. We publish, elsewhere, divers extracts from New-Granadian journals on the subject. Our cotemporaries are excited and belligerent. Their violent abuse of the American Government and American people, for demanding reparation for a ruthless massacre is simply ridiculous, and can have no other effect than to excite the semi-barbarous natives of the Isthmus to the commission of further outrages. It is to be hoped that every precaution has been taken at Panama to prevent the recurrence of such a scene as that witnessed just one year ago. In the meantime, the duty devolves upon our Government to bring this question to a prompt settlement;—to obtain for American citizens crossing the Isthmus necessary security for life and property, and, for the victims of the 15th of April last, the most ample reparation for the grievous injuries and losses they sustained.

We have no news of special interest from California by this mail. Ex-Treasurer BATES has been tried and convicted, as a defaulter to the amount of $124,000, by the State Senate in its capacity of a High Court of Impeachment. He was declared to be henceforth disqualified from holding any office of honor or profit in California. The trial of Comptroller WHITMAN for malfeasance had not taken place. In relation to the State debt, the Legislature had done nothing, but it is positively asserted that some action will be taken in the matter before adjournment. The weather in California had been very fine, and from all parts of the State reports are favorable to the agricultural and mining interests. There are reports of gold discoveries in Santa Barbara County, but to what extent, has not been ascertained.

Accounts from Oregon speak of the severity of the Winter, and of consequent damage to crops and cattle. In anticipation of political changes, the subject of Slavery has been somewhat agitated in the Territory, but public sentiment is strong against its introduction.

We have advices from the Sandwich Islands to the 21st of February. They are without any general interest.

We have received interesting letters from the Gadsden Purchase, dated from Tubac and the Rio Colorado. The mineral wealth of the new territory is described as being very great. Under the cognomen of the "Arizona Colonization Company," a well-armed body have assembled on the Pacific Coast. Their declared intention is to promote emigration and work the valuable mines of the country. Though they are armed it is for protection against the Indians, and, so far, they have afforded no grounds for the reports, circulated in San Francisco, that the expedition, under its peaceful title, was in reality a fillibustering enterprise organized for the invasion of the Mexican State of Sonora.

No later intelligence is received from the South Pacific, by the George Law, but our correspondent sends us some further particulars of the revolutionary movements in Peru. VIVANCO's prospects continued unfavorable, and the late robbery committed by two of his ships, on the British mail-steamer, made them liable at once to attack and capture by the formidable British fleet now in those waters. The next news from the South was anxiously looked for at Panama.

From Australia we learn that the Commander of the North Exploring Expedition had returned, and had made his report to the Government. He says that extreme monotony characterizes the physical features of the whole country traversed from the Victoria to the 140th meridian. In reference to settlement, he divides the country into three districts, each with its distinct character, climate, and geographical position, viz.: The Northwest Coast, the Gulf of Carpentaria, and the Eastern Coast. The first is dry, hot, and healthy; the second offers no inducement to settlers; and the third is a good country for settlement—is cooler and more humid than the two others.

By the arrival of the Empire City we receive later intelligence from Havana. The Commissioners appointed by the Captain General to inspect the new guano discoveries on the Keys, made a highly favorable report, and before long we may expect to see a successful competition established against the Peruvian monopoly. Great preparations were being made for the reception of the 10,000 troops expected to arrive from Spain. The trade in Coolies and Africans is continued on an extensive scale.

By way of Havana we have very late news from Mexico. The new Constitution, of which we gave a lengthened abstract in Saturday's issue, has been received with great favor by the people, but the Church is obstinate in its opposition to this as (in Mexico) it has been to all other plans of progress and improvement. President COMONFORT will act with energy and decision, and, it is said, is determined to punish the Archbishop and other ecclesiastics who thus raise their voices against the laws of the land. It was known at Vera Cruz on the 8d inst. that the projected treaties between Mexico and the United States were a failure, and it was rumored that fresh instructions had been received by Mr. FORSYTH to negotiate other treaties.

A private letter from Oroomiah, Persia, announces the death of Mr. STODDARD, who went out as missionary in 1842. He died on the 22d of January, having been taken with the typhus fever on the 22d of the previous month. The letter, which is from Rev. Dr. WRIGHT, thus notices his last illness.

"About the eighteenth day of the disease, the fever appeared to break, and for some days we regarded him as convalescent. But our hopes were dashed to the ground. After some days he grew worse again, delirium came on, and he fell into a stupor from which he never roused. I was standing by his bedside when he breathed his last. There was no groan nor struggle. It was like a little child falling asleep. He was peaceful and happy in view of death. Early in his disease he wished to know the probable result, and it was his desire, if such were the will of the Lord, to depart and be with Christ. He was able, during his sickness, to talk but little, but that little showed that his heart was set on things above."

We learn from Washington that the Administration has acquiesced in the plan of the European Powers for the settlement of the Sound Dues question. Thus this long vexed matter has at length been set at rest.

Hon. ABRAHAM RENCHER, formerly a Whig member of Congress from North Carolina, is to succeed Hon. DAVID MERRIWETHER, whose term is about to expire, as Governor of the Territory of New-Mexico.

The Senate's amendment to the Police bill were yesterday concurred in by the Assembly, and it now only awaits the signature of the Governor to become a law. A dispatch from Albany, received last night, informs us that considerable excitement prevailed about the Executive Chamber relative to the appointments under the new law,—which, it was expected, would be sent to the Senate to-day.

The Assembly yesterday passed the bill relative to the Supervisors of this City, and also the one authorizing the erection of the new City Hall. A great variety of business was gone through with in both Houses.

It is understood that Commodore PERRY is to have command of the new squadron which is to be sent out to Japan.

The Aldermen and Supervisors last evening adjourned without doing anything of importance.

Councilman BOOLE, in the meeting of the Board last evening, presented the following resolution: "Whereas, the present Legislature have enacted a charter for this City against the expressed wish of the citizens thereof, and whereas, it is believed that some of the sections are unconstitutional, therefore, be it, resolved, that His Honor the Mayor be authorized and directed to have the same contested in any Court possessing jurisdiction over the same." It was seconded by Councilman HUGHES, and, after debate, laid over. Nothing of importance was done by the Supervisors, or either Board of the Common Council, last night.

Yesterday, before the Surrogate, was resumed the taking of testimony as to the validity of Mrs. CUNNINGHAM BURDELL's claim to a widow's portion of the estate of the late HARVEY BURDELL. The witnesses examined were Miss HELEN and Miss AUGUSTA CUNNINGHAM, the claimant's daughters. Both were subjected to a rigorous cross-examination by the opposing counsel. The evidence elicited possesses considerable interest. That of the elder daughter, who alleges she was present at the marriage of Dr. BURDELL to her mother, exhibits several details perfectly new to the public.

J. FISHER WEEKS, who was on Friday appointed Police Captain of the Thirteenth Ward, in place of RUSSELL, dismissed, has resigned, considering his berth in the Custom House more profitable and stable than the one given him in the Police Department. The Mayor, when advised yesterday of this resignation, rang his bell, and calling for WILLIAM MCKENNA, the Sergeant of his Office, swore him in in place of Mr. FISHER. The new made Captain, astonished and pleased, thanked His Honor, and left for the outer room to announce what had been done. After receiving the congratulations of his companions, he left to take command of his District. Captain MCKENNA is an Irishman by birth. He has lived in the Thirteenth Ward a great many years, and is well known to all its inhabitants. He has never been a politician, makes no pretension to shoulder-hitting, and never kept a porter-house, but is, on the contrary, strictly a temperate man, and has always been known as a faithful and reliable officer.

JOHN DE COSTA and three other Portuguese sailors, lodged in the Tombs on a charge of having murdered the Captain and cook of the General Pierce, devised a plan, on Saturday last, to escape from prison. Fortunately, through a timely discovery, the plan was frustrated. It is understood that the prisoners stood ready, if necessary to the success of their scheme, to murder the warder and whatever deputies might have interposed to prevent their intended escape. The four prisoners have been removed from their former quarters, and are now placed in the cells appropriated to prisoners under criminal sentence.

The Council of Sachems met yesterday afternoon at Tammany Hall, and had presented to them the names of the parties, selected by the Small and Savage factions, from which are to be chosen twenty-two umpires to act on the proposed new election for a general committee. The Small men were agreed upon their representatives from all the Wards but one, the Eleventh; and from two or three Wards there were opposing Savage delegations. A good deal of debate was had, and a committee of five, consisting of Messrs. PURDY, KELLY, ROSE, MARSH and FOWLER, was appointed to examine as to the contested delegations, and report to the Council on Wednesday.

Flags were displayed on the shipping and hotels yesterday in celebration of the birthday of HENRY CLAY. CLAY was born on the 12th, but as that came this year on Sunday, the 13th was, treated as its anniversary. At several tables his memory was renewed.

The New-York Young Men's Christian Association had a special meeting last evening (called by the Finance Committee to consider the fiscal affairs of the institution, which are in a troublesome condition.) The majority, thinking that they would remain so until the resolution, offered by Prof. CROSBY on the 26th of January, forbidding freedom of discussion on the subject of Slavery, was rescinded, last night repealed it, and adopted, by a large majority, a substitute offered by Mr. AUSTIN ABBOTT, which is calculated to calm the troubles of the Association. The substitute provides for freedom of speech within the bounds of propriety and courtesy, and that hereafter resolutions declaratory of opinion merely shall not be put to the vote.

JOHN CLOUGH, policeman of the Eighteenth Ward, has been appointed to the Sergeantship in the Mayor's office, made vacant by the promotion of MCKENNA to the Captaincy of the Thirteenth Ward.

A common man, if he wants a map of Broadway, gives a stationer a quarter and takes one; then with a lead pencil he readily traces any changes that committees recommend or the Street Commissioner is opening. But Councilmen who want a map for the use of three or five committees empower a Surveyor to make a new one and let his bill help to swell the taxes. Last night they ordered any quantity of new maps. It encourages trade.

The United States Grand Jury concluded their session yesterday, when they brought in several bills, the contents of which have not yet been made public. The case of the Fillibusters is the only one of popular interest that was before them.

United States Commissioner STILWELL committed JOHN STACY for trial in the United States Court yesterday. JOHN was mate of the Christiana, and he is charged with having beaten JAMES W. GORDON, a sailor on board his ship.

The steamer Niagara will be ready for sea in about a week and will then proceed directly to London to take on board the telegraphic table, without making the anticipated trial trip.

The Mayor and the Police.

Very many among our citizens have had serious doubts as to the justice and policy of the new law concerning our Metropolitan Police. It has seemed to them eminently proper that the Department should be under the exclusive control of officers chosen by our own citizens, and that the Mayor, being the chief Executive officer of the City and responsible for its peace and good order, should have very full authority over this important and responsible branch of the public service.

The recent action of Mayor WOOD seems likely to remove most of these scruples. After holding open until the very last moment places in the Department which have been vacant for months, the Mayor, just at the moment when the new Police bill is likely to go into operation, fills them all,—and that in such a way as must create distrust and alarm in the mind of every citizen not absolutely reckless of the public good. He has made Police Captains in more than one instance of the most notorious brawlers and ruffians in the whole City. It is from the keepers of the lowest grog-shops,—from men foremost in street brawls and election riots,—that he has made deliberate selection of the officers to whom is intrusted the custody of the lives and property,—the peace and good order,—the justice and the quiet of this great City. One of these men keeps a drinking-house which has been noted for years as the headquarters of all the rowdyism, all the fighting and all the brutality of his Ward,—in which repeated cases of stabbing have occurred, and the proprietor of which has distinguished himself, in one fight, by biting off the nose of his opponent! This is the man whom Mayor WOOD selects as the guardian of the interests and honor of the City. And many of his other appointments are of the same general character.

Mayor WOOD seems to have thrown overboard every thought of regard for the public good,—every consideration of his own character,—every appearance even of respect for his oath of office, in a desperate attempt to bolster up his political fortunes and compel every officer of the City Government to become, not simply his confederate but his supple tool, in the accomplishment of this object. While the Herald announces his purpose to resign office and travel in Europe, he is really more active than ever in fortifying his political position, and in using all the Departments of the City Government which are under his control for his own personal, and political ends. The appointments he has just made indicate the spirit in which the work is undertaken, and afford ground for conjecture as to the recklessness with which it will be pursued.

It is understood that the resignation of Chief MATSELL is at the Mayor's service, and is to be forthcoming, and Captain WHITTER of the Twenty-second Ward appointed in his place, whenever Judge RUSSELL can be brought to lend his necessary assent and cooperation to the act. Unless we have been misinformed, both the parties to this conspiracy have been made to pause by the dismal foreshadowings of the Recorder's charge. There are facts behind the strong and startling declarations of this document, which neither the Mayor nor the City Judge are particularly anxious to drag to the light. So far they have relied with a good degree of confidence upon the impunity which the Recorder's alleged complicity was likely to secure; but they begin to suspect that his Honor may deem the explosion so close at hand as to render the offensive the only position of safety.

We presume the intention of the Mayor is first to place the Police Department completely in the hands of his own most unscrupulous tools, and then to refuse to yield control of it to the new commission created by the Legislature. This will compel them to resort to the Courts; and the Mayor undoubtedly expects, by delay and other devices, to retain possession of the power he now holds until after the municipal Election provided for by the new Charter. In this way he expects to secure his own reëlection. The experiment is a bold one, certainly:—what success will attend it remains to be seen. But if the proceedings he has already taken are to be regarded as any index of the future, it is safe to predict that, while the controversy between the Mayor and the new Commission lasts, our City will be completely at the mercy of the worst class of rowdies and ruffians who infest its streets.

THE CENTRAL PARK AND THE NEW CITY HALL.—Two very important measures that have been before the present Legislature at Albany touching the improvement of this metropolis are the bills authorizing the City to expend $2,000,000 in building a new City Hall, and creating a Board of Commissioners to improve the Central Park. The City Hall bill has passed, and the Park bill has passed the Assembly, but has been amended by the Senate Committee. The Assembly bill named five Commissioners who were to hold their office five years and be allowed no compensation greater than three hundred dollars for expenses incurred in attending to their duties. The Senate amendments give the Governor of the State authority to award the amount of compensation which the Commissioners shall receive, and make some changes in the persons of the Commission. We presume that it will become a law, and that the improvement of the Park will be at once commenced. These two great measures will cost some money; the amount to be expended in improving the Park is not to exceed one hundred thousand dollars a year, and the payment for the City Hall will not, probably, be much more than double that sum until the work shall be completed. But the two improvements are greatly needed. They will add immensely to the beauty and magnificence of the City, and give it more than ever the character of a great metropolis. The cost of the two works will be but trifling compared with the increased value they will give to real estate.

It is not easy to detect any good reasons for the amendments made to the Park Bill by the Senate. Their only effect is to confer some additional patronage upon the Governor, and enable five gentlemen to draw somewhat largely upon the public treasury. It is quite possible that there are five gentlemen who need money, and whom the dominant political party feel disposed to accommodate by giving it to them. But the extra expense is quite needless, and the effect of the change will be to place five needy and importunate politicians upon a Commission which needs the services of public-spirited and cultivated gentlemen. But political partisanship rules the hour. Everything upon which Government can lay its hands is regarded and treated as party "spoils," and as such is divided among the "victors." Is is probably too much to expect an exception to be made in the case of the Central Park.

The Progress of Street-Cleaning.

The public have rejoiced to perceive that the unpropitious weather of the last few days, and the delay of the contractors in bringing the street-sweeping machines into use, have not prevented much from being already done towards relieving the City from the vast accumulation of mud, offal and refuse with which its thoroughfares are still partially covered. It would be desirable that William, John, Pearl and South streets were at once attended to; and it will not do for those streets which have been cleansed to remain so long neglected as to fall back into their original condition. Nevertheless, a considerable amount of labor has been expended, and some parts of our metropolis have become quite rejuvenated since Mr. REYNOLDS has had charge of them. From the First, Second and Third Wards, 2,279, 2,162 and 932 loads, respectively, of dirt, have been carted away within the past week alone; 2,099 loads have been taken from the Sixth Ward, 2,637 from the Seventeenth, 1,909 from the Ninth, and 1,938 from the Fourth and Fifth. From the remaining five Wards, which have been intrusted to Mr. REYNOLDS' care, no less than 7,265 loads of filth have been removed. Thirty thousand loads and over, of ashes, manure and dirt, have been transferred from the streets to the different dumping grounds, within little more than a fortnight.

This account sounds well. It will gladden the hearts of those who had begun to look upon the Ebling dynasty as beyond all reform, and it will insure the eventual confirmation by the Common Council, of the contracts which have been signed by the Mayor, Mr. FLAGG and the Commissioner of Streets and Lamps. If the course which the contractors have thus initiated, is persevered in, they will deserve the gratitude of every individual who desires the welfare of the City, and that kind of practical reform, in relation to its thoroughfares, which is so requisite to its proper sanitary condition. It was the boast, however, of the gentlemen who have taken upon themselves the care of the streets, that when the first rough labor of cleaning them had been gone through with, they should be kept in their improved condition. The mob obstacles which were encountered during the first three nights of their operations, were occasioned by the belief that hand labor was to be superseded as soon as practicable, by that of machines, and that the most perfect neatness could be secured, at a comparatively small outlay of either money or strength. There is no doubt whatsoever that this can be done. Paris, Birmingham, Liverpool, Manchester, and other cities of Europe, have set examples of what can be accomplished by a proper use of machinery, which must be followed here before permanent relief is afforded either to the streets themselves or to the pockets of tax-payers.

It is beginning to be understood, in the principal cities of the old world, that the sanitary problem in relation to thickly-populated places has been theoretically solved. It has been discovered that refuse, offal and manure are sufficiently valuable to pay the whole expense of their own removal, if this latter is done properly and methodically. A competent judge estimated the rough value of the dirt in this City, two weeks ago, as it lay on the ground, at over fifty thousand dollars. If, therefore, the expenditure for labor in carrying off so valuable a property could have been reduced to its minimum, there is no reason why the City should not have received a bonus from the contractors, instead of remunerating them at the costly rate of a quarter of a million of dollars a year. Mr. REYNOLDS, as we have been told, thoroughly comprehends the possibility of carrying into operation, in America, the European system in relation to streets, and we take it for granted that but for some insurmountable cause a beginning would have been made ere now. As it is, so much has been accomplished, that censure of any kind would be not only unmerited but unjust, and we are prepared to hope that time will show that all the promises which have been made by the contractors will be fulfilled.

PURSUIT OF KNOWLEDGE UNDER DIFFICULTIES.—Our neighbor, the Daily News, gets hold of some very remarkable bits of information now and then. Its Albany letter yesterday contained a startling piece of news, to this effect:

"The NEW-YORK TIMES has certainly been read out of the Republican Party by the Regency here."

We consider this a personal matter, and should like more detailed intelligence in regard to it. We should like to know who constitute "the Regency," and by what sort of process the "reading out" referred to is performed. And in the next place, we should like to know the precise effect of such an operation upon the bodies and souls of the parties subjected to it. And in the third place,—assuming the news of the News to be true,—we should like to be informed whether there is any room in the world for quiet and unpretending people outside of the "Republican party." We shall feel deeply indebted to our neighbor for further information upon these points.

PROBABLY TRUE.—The Providence Post is dreadfully scandalized because the TIMES recently avowed its intention of buying its printing paper where it could do it to the best advantage,—where it could "make anything by it." This policy it thinks is "exceedingly characteristic of the North." That is undoubtedly true. There is a great deal of human nature at the North. It has been reported,—erroneously no doubt,—that there were occasional developments of it even in New-England.

SIGNS OF WOE—THE MALICE OF DECREPITUDE.—The dilapidated and indignant "historian" of Parker Vein is getting desperate. Secretary TOUCEY declines to join his establishment or even to allow the vessels of war to be used as lodging and eating rooms for his reporters. Secretary CASS, it is said, has been amusing his leisure by stuffing the historical gobemouche with romantic accounts of his private conversations with Lord NAPIER and imaginary extracts from his secret dispatches to our Ministers abroad,—all which have been duly recorded in the Herald and sent abroad as evidences of the extraordinary, unexampled and inconceivable enterprise of that establishment. The President is very dilatory, indeed, in settling the matter of foreign appointments, and has not dropped the faintest hint of encouragement about the French Mission, not even indicated a willingness to send the "historian" of Parker Vein as a Christian missionary to the Cannibals of the Marquesas Islands. In sober truth, the time seems to have fully come when men in office have the audacity to suppose that they can treat with contempt and impunity that great organ of public opinion, which puts in Administrations and puts them out at its pleasure—which regulates the moral, social, and political movements of both hemispheres—which created Potosi stock, and swelled the price of Parker Vein from nothing to eighty per cent—and which, after threatening the commercial world with hideous ruin and combustion dire, has graciously postponed the catastrophe for nearly four years more.

They will find out their mistake. Rickety, ruinous and rotten as it is, the "historian" of Fancy Stocks will show these gentlemen that they are rushing to their ruin. Yesterday's Herald contains the following summons,—at the head of its columns, and double leaded, calling upon the Republican hosts to rally under the Herald flag for 1860:

"NOTICE TO THE POLITICAL FRIENDS OF FREMONT.—The honest and outspoken political supporters of JOHN C. FREMONT, are earnestly advised to form, as soon as possible, Standing Committees and Clubs in every town, precinct, district, city or county of the United States, and thus prepare the way properly to enter the field for the Presidency in 1860. Unless the friends of FREMONT begin at once to act in this way, he and his supporters will be cheated by the corrupt politicians who are now seeking the management and control of the Republican masses throughout the country. Now is the time to begin the great movement for 1860 by forming honest centres of union and intelligence against corruption, fraud and incipient revolution."

If BUCHANAN, CASS, TOUCEY & Co., do not tremble in their official shoes when they read this pronunciamento, and make haste to render homage to the dilapidated old Warwick who thus shakes his bundle of bones in their faces, official presumption must have reached an unwonted height.

There is, in sober truth, the most melancholy ingratitude in the manner in which the Administration treats the Herald. After its services in the election,—services as effective as they were self-denying,—it had reason to expect better treatment. Other journals defended Mr. BUCHANAN, and their claims are conceded. But what was their help compared with the efficient support which the Herald rendered by opposing him? It is possible they may be bribing the "historian" to renew his hostility by promises for the future:—but certainly they should pay off old scores before opening a new account.

HOW GOVERNMENT ADVERTISING IS DONE. Men are put into office to do business for the public. It is assumed that they will do it on business principles,—so as to promote the interest of the public, which has made them its agents. That this assumption is utterly falsified in practice,—that the last thing thought of or aimed at by even the highest office-holders, is the public interest, is perfectly notorious:—but it finds a striking illustration in the manner in which Government advertising is done.

The object of advertising is publicity,—and every business man advertises where his notices will reach the greatest number of persons specially interested in the subject of them. Thus a bookseller will advertise where his announcement will be likely to meet the eyes of the greatest number of book-buyers, and so of others. Now see how the Government manages the matter. Proposals were wanted at the Post-Office Department for carrying the mails on all the routes in the State of New-York. The notice thereof—every business man would say—should be given in the newspapers most likely to be seen by the Railroad Directors and Express-men of the State. We find it,—ten columns long,—in The Citizen, a weekly Irish newspaper published in this City. Similar advertisements from the Custom-House appear in the Irish News, the Irish American, the Celt and other weekly journals, which have no circulation beyond the class for which they are designed, and which is precisely the class that is not interested in the remotest degree in the subjects of them! In selections among the daily newspapers for Government announcements the same peculiar sagacity is shown. The papers chosen are uniformly those which nobody ever sees, and of which nobody ever hears. They have no circulation, no influence, no position, no possibility of giving to these notices the publicity which is absolutely necessary for the public good. And the reason why they are chosen is because they devote themselves to wholesale, indiscriminate, sickening laudation of the men who have these favors to bestow, and who are willing thus to purchase personal puffs by a sacrifice of the public interest.

MARYLAND DEEDS.—The following is an extract from a letter written by a distinguished lawyer in Maryland: "It is doubtful whether a deed can now safely be executed before a Commissioner out of the State of Maryland to bind land therein, and it is therefore better to acknowledge before a Notary Public or a Judge of any State or Federal Court having a seal—in regard to whom there is no doubt."

LATER FROM NICARAGUA.

Rumored Capture of Fort Castillo by Col. Lockridge.

Sickness and Disaffection Among the Men.

Great Doubts Respecting Walker's Last Reported Victory.

Correspondence of the New-York Daily Times.

ASPINWALL, Saturday, April 4, 1857.

We have had no Nicaragua news here, from the Pacific side, since the Orizaba arrived at Panama; and all the information I could obtain from the passengers when they arrived here, and all I have since learned from Panama, was that WALKER was in a very bad fix, the Allies having surrounded him at all sides at Rivas. Nothing positive has been heard from him since the 5th of March, as the Costa Ricans had entire possession of the road between Rivas and San Juan del Sur.

All WALKER's friends here think that his race is run. With respect to the rumor of a battle in which he had defeated the Allies with great slaughter, some of my friends have made diligent inquiry among the officers of the Orizaba, before her return to San Francisco, and ascertained that they had heard no such accounts when in San Juan del Sur.

The British Mail Steamer Clyde has just arrived from Greytown with dates to the 3d. I went on board personally and spent an hour in order to gain correct information. I have just left her. All I could ascertain is the following:—LOCKRIDGE and his forces on the river San Juan del Norte, had, down to the sailing of the Clyde, done nothing. It is rumored that the Texas is to bring out 500 men with several gun boats with which they can, or believe they can force the river. Until then, LOCKRIDGE intends to remain quiet, and will not commence the offensive. Some of my informants stated also, that just as the Clyde was leaving Greytown, a report was current that LOCKRIDGE had taken Castillo, or that some battle had occurred in the neighborhood of Machuca or Castillo. Perhaps the Costa Ricans had attacked LOCKRIDGE's position—but all was uncertainty.

The news of the brilliant successes of the fillibusters has reached this quarter by every steamer, but has always proven false. During my residence here of three months, I have heard of some eight victories, won by LOCKRIDGE on the San Juan, and neither I nor any of the citizens here give the least credence to anything the fillibusters may say or write.

Several deserters from LOCKRIDGE, who came by the Clyde, give dismal accounts of their past sufferings and privations. With their present force, they saw no chance of opening communication with WALKER. At the very least, one-half of his men are down with the fever. They have not been able to get any news from WALKER down the river. The boys think he is completely used up, has escaped from Nicaragua, and will endeavor to get to the San Juan River to take command of the small force there. Gen. HORNSBY is in a state of high dudgeon because LOCKRIDGE will not hand over his command. In fact, all the superior officers are at loggerheads.

If the river cannot be forced, LOCKRIDGE says an attempt will be made on Costa Rica, as he is certain 500 to 1,000 men will be dispatched from the States by the Texas and Tennessee for this purpose.

Several scouts who were sent out to reconnoitre Castillo, between the 20th and 25th, have not returned.

Movements of Col. Lockridge.

GREYTOWN, Friday, April 3, 1856.

Agreeably to promise, I endeavor to forward you the latest news. There is, however, little or no news of importance. Col. LOCKRIDGE has been down here several times with the steamer Scott for provisions—the last time was on the 31st ult. The sickness amongst his men is alarming; and from one or two of the men to whom I spoke, I learned that his whole force had refused to remain any longer at Serapiqui, or the Island of Providence, at the mouth of the river San Carlos, on account of the malady prevailing there. In consequence, LOCKRIDGE has abandoned these places and moved out his entire force a few miles higher up the river,—to the Machuca rapids—five miles above the Island of Providence.

Several deserters who have recently arrived here say that the movement to Machuca was not made altogether on account of the malady prevailing amongst his troops, but to mislead and deceive the Costa Ricans; for that LOCKRIDGE intended to remain at Machuca till the Texas should bring more reinforcements, and then move up the Serapiqui towards Costa Rica. [The Texas, as our readers are aware, has been withdrawn, and consequently no recruits can go out in her.—Ed. TIMES.] As the prevailing opinion amongst the officers and men was, that in the event of the capture of Fort Castillo, which could only be accomplished by an immense sacrifice of life, they could not proceed further, as the upper river and lake steamers were held by the Costa Ricans near San Carlos. They also say that he had sent out scouts to find the Costa Rican road leading from the interior towards Castillo, but these scouts had not returned. There was a rumor just before the closing of my letter, that LOCKRIDGE had made a demonstration against Castillo. But the result appears uncertain, and unless heavy reinforcements arrive soon, the forces here may be considered as disbanded. E. L.

General Walker's Position at Rivas.

ACTUAL FORCE UNDER HIS COMMAND—ASSASSINATION OF EX-PRESIDENT RIVAS UNTRUE—GREAT DOUBTS RESPECTING THE LAST REPORTED BATTLE.

PANAMA, Saturday, April 4, 1857.

We shall not have any news from WALKER's camp at Rivas until about the 15th instant by the Panama Railroad Company's Steamer Panama, from Central American ports. I gave you as a rumor in my last letter that CAYCE, who was cut off from Rivas, and was at San Juan del Sur, with 40 men, had undertaken to convoy the 80 men arrived by the Sierra Nevada from California to Rivas, and had lost half of them in the attempt. I now learn, from undoubted authority, that in substance, the statement was correct. CAYCE, with the 40 men immediately under his charge, took a by-road and arrived safely at Rivas. But the 80 recruits, who had started earlier in the morning, met the Costa Ricans about five miles on the road, and left 40 of their number on the field of battle.

The friends of WALKER still contend that he has from 1,300 to 1,500 men under his command at Rivas. A "gentleman" informs the Aspinwall Courier that, on the 16th of March WALKER had 1,100 good fighting men, besides several hundred more fit for defence, in case he was attacked. Let us see: When I was at Rivas, the last of January, WALKER's whole force, to my certain knowledge, consisted of not more than 800 men fit for duty, and 150 men in the two hospitals, who would never do any more fighting. Since then, he received, Feb. 2, by the Orizaba, 50 men from San Francisco; March 1, he got 75, or, say 80 by the Sierra Nevada; March 16, the Orizaba landed 21 men at San Juan del Sur, making, in all, 151 men, which, added to 800, gives a total of 951 men. Since then he lost, in the two first fights at Obraje and St. George, 50 men; in subsequent fights at the latter place, at least 50 more. SANDERS lost 50 in trying to relieve CAYCE. The latter lost 40 in getting back to Rivas. One hundred and twenty-six deserters have arrived, by way of Costa Rica, at Panama, leaving 44 more to come by next steamer—in all, lost since Feb. 1, 360 men; add to this at least 100 additional men who have died, sickened or deserted, and we have 491 men—100 more than he can probably count up to-day.

No confidence is placed in the story of the assassination of President RIVAS at Leon. It is true that one of his Ministers, CASTILLO, a native of Granada, was fired at while standing in his own door, and that next day both he and another of the Cabinet resigned. Probably the story of RIVAS's assassination grew out of these circumstances.

I wrote you in my last, by the Texas, that I could see no great reason for doubt that a battle did really take place in the suburbs of Rivas between WALKER and a portion of the Costa Rican force. In the face of the fact that I have been unable to find a single person or letter here giving any definite account of such a fight, but that all appears to be founded on hearsay, I am now inclined to set it down as a Rowback—similar to the story brought by the prior steamer, the Sierra Nevada. The most prominent event in California of the fortnight ending March 23, has been the conviction and ... of Henry Bates, late State Treasurer, by the ... In drawing up the Articles of Impeachment, the Assembly Committee stated that additional specifications might thereafter be added. It, therefore, excited little surprise when it was subsequently announced that a new deficiency, in the Treasury Department, of $64,000, had been discovered, accruing ... the 1st of January. The matter will next come ..., in the course of the criminal prosecution which ... been instituted.

The Governor having vetoed the Appropriation bill, the attention of the Legislature has been directed to the passage of acts having in view the increase of the revenue of the State. The most prominent of these is the Stamp Act, which has been reported upon favorably by the Committee of Ways and Means, has passed the House, and which, though violently opposed, will probably become a law. Acts for a more stringent enforcement of the poll tax, and for detaining additional revenue from imposts on the sale of consigned goods, are also under discussion in the Legislature.

In relation to the State Debt, the Legislature have as yet done nothing, and although they will undoubtedly act in the matter before their adjournment, it is difficult to say what shape that action will take, whether it will result in an act to be submitted to the people for ratification, or by embodying the recognition of the debt in the organic law of the State by means of a Constitutional Convention. Both plans are warmly advocated, and it is at present impossible to say which will be adopted. All, however, appear to be united in desiring to avoid actual repudiation.

Some apprehensions have been entertained that the public schools in San Francisco would be closed for the want of available funds to carry them on. Measures are, however, being taken, which it is trusted will avoid so unfortunate an alternative.

An act reversing and altering the mode of selecting grand and trial jurors in this county has been passed by the Legislature.

The introduction of a bill providing for the prosecution of libel suits into the Legislature, has called forth a warm discussion of its merits by the press of the State.

In view of the deplorable condition of the State Prison convicts under the management of Estill, a bill has been passed by the Legislature appropriating $5,000 for their temporary relief. Pending this action ... of the prisoners have died of starvation in the ... of attempting an escape.

An act has been passed under which McGowan has succeeded in getting the venue of his trial changed from San Francisco to Napa County.

The receipt of the intelligence in San Francisco of the passage of the Wagon Road bill has occasioned universal satisfaction, and high expectations of speedily beneficial results are generally entertained.

The clipper Great Republic, Captain Limeburner, arrived on the 9th ult., 91 days from New-York, making the fifth best voyage between the two ports. She attracts considerable attention, and was visited by thousands on Sunday last.

A murderous attack was made upon Colonel Peltzo and his party, while on their way from Great Salt Lake to California, during which Mr. Tobin was dangerously wounded, and two others of the party slightly. Colonel Peltzo lost six valuable horses and all his baggage. Mr. Tobin was taken on to Saint Bernardine by the mail carrier, suffering much from his wounds.

The weather in California for the fortnight ending March 23, had been of the most favorable kind, both for the mining and agricultural interests.

Miscellaneous Intelligence.

Conviction and Sentence of Henry Bates, Ex-State Treasurer.—Bates, the Ex-State Treasurer, having refused to plead before the Senate, sitting as a Court of Impeachment, the Court went, last Thursday, into secret session for the purpose of considering their judgment. The result of their deliberation was a verdict, in which the Senate, having found him guilty as charged, adjudge and decree "that said Henry Bates be forever disqualified from holding any office of trust, honor or profit, under the State of California." On the adoption of this judgment the vote stood thirty ayes to three noes—Messrs Westerfield, Ferguson of Sacramento, and Coffey of Mendocino, voting in the negative. Whereupon the Court adjourned until the 23d of March, when it will hear the case of Whiteman.

SEVERITY OF WINTER—SLAVERY AGITATION, &c

Our exchanges from this Territory are up to the 12th March, and as usual, are mostly filled with controversies and discussions of a personal or political nature, of little interest to the public. The Winter there, as almost everywhere else on this coast, has been unusually severe. Many cattle have perished, owing to the grass being covered up with snow.

The subject of Slavery is somewhat agitated with reference to anticipated political changes, but the public sentiment would appear, judging from the tone of the press, to be strong against its introduction.

Preliminary steps are being taken to elect another delegate to Congress.

TRADE—PROSPECTS—WRECK—THE COOLIE TRADE.

Our dates from Honolulu are to Feb. 21.

Trade was dull, and the prospects of business the coming season was very flattering, in view of the probable falling off in the whaling fleet. The weather was fine, though large quantities of rain had fallen, accompanied with terrific thunder and ligatuing.

On Feb. 2, schooner Rixie was wrecked on the same point where the West Point was cast away one year ago.

The five years' term for the first importation of coolies having expired, a question has arisen whether they are bound to serve out the time they may have been absent, and refund the expenses paid on their account. This was decided in the Police Court of Honolulu, in the case of Joseph'e Booth'a coolie, in which it was ajudged that the coolie should serve out the term of 120 days that he had been away at different times, and also the sum of $27 50 in addition, being expenses and fines Mr. Booth had had to pay on his account during the five years, which would add about another year to his term.

Interesting from the Gadsden Purchase.

The San Francisco Herald is permitted to make the following extracts from a private letter dated Tubac, (Gadsden Purchase,) Feb. 21, 1857:

We are progressing well in our explorations and operations. The Aravaca Rancho lately purchased for the company, contains many silver mines of rich ores, besides some gold placers, and copper and lead mines.

"We have lately discovered and occupied ten veins of silver ore near the Ceno Colorado, between Sopiri and La Aravaca of promising richness. The principal vein, named in honor of our old friend and President, "The Heintzleman Mine," yields upon assay thirty marcos to the carga of three hundred pounds, or nearly $100 in silver to the one hundred pounds ore—the ore is abundant, and we have a force of Mexican miners employed in its extraction, but have no bellows or means of smelting and refining.

The territory is in a very bad condition. The Apaches continue to traverse it in large bands of 50 to 150. About 5,000 head of stock are carried out of Sonora per annum by these maranders, to say nothing of captives and booty. The Government of Mexico and people of Sonora are at their mercy. It would be a wise and liberal policy in our Government to purchase Sonora—whip out these marauders, protect the people, and develop the resources of that Silver State."

In another letter, dated from the Colorado, the writer is exceedingly sanguine as to the great mineral resources of the new Territory.

San Francisco Markets.

San Francisco, Saturday Evening, March 21, 1857.

The principal feature in the trade of to-day has been the speculative inquiry for and sale, at a rapid advance, of American Whisky. The feeling for Domestic Liquors has been improving by degrees for the past two weeks, and yesterday, immediately on the sailing of the steamer, a brisk demand commenced, resulting in the extreme inflation noticed below in the rates. Domestic Brandy has also improved, and sales have been made at an advance. The inquiry yesterday for Pork, Beef, &c., today has fevered the market for Bacon, and sales have been effected at a marked advance. The jobbing rates for Pork, it is stated, have advanced very materially. Besido the above, there have been sales of East Indian Rice at figures indicating but little effect on the market resulting from the importation yesterday so unexpectedly to hand. There has also been some movement in Oil, and the parcels of Crude Polar which have been for some time on the market have been taken up.

With respect to Domestic Produce, the week closes with decidedly a better tendency in the Flour market. The jobbing demand is good, and holders are confident of a reaction next month. Some parcels of Wheat have been sold to-day, and the prices obtained are claimed to have established a considerable degree of firmness in the market. Barley, as usual, is dull, and the few sales reported do not indicate any favorable tendency. For Oats there is apparently no demand. The jobbing business of the day has been very good, and altogether the trade have reason to congratulate themselves on the amount of goods taken out of the market for consumption during the week just closed.

LATER FROM HAVANA.

Arrival of the Empire City.

COMMERCIAL NEWS—THE COMMISSIONERS' REPORT ON THE GUANO DISCOVERIES—PREPARATIONS FOR THE RECEPTION OF TROOPS FROM SPAIN—THE COOLIE AND AFRICAN SLAVE-TRADE—FAILURE OF THE SUGAR CROP, &c.

The Empire City, Capt. S. P. Griffin, left New-Orleans at 8½ A. M. on the 5th inst. and entered the Harbor of Havana at sunrise on the 8th.

The E. C. left for New-York at 11½ o'clock A. M. the same day and arrived at her wharf at an early hour yesterday morning.

Exchangee are reported: New-York, 4 to 4½ ₱ ct. discount; London, 5¾ to 6 ₱ ct. premium. Freights, owing to the large fleet of vessels at anchor and daily arrivals, have declined, while receipts from the interior have diminished—with an advance on Sugar of ⅛ real ₱ arrobe.

A brisk trade is noted in the article of "Coolies," four cargoes having arrived since previous advices, say 1,322 "in bulk," in addition to 450 spoiled on the passage.

Competent authority quotes (in happy succession to the above) business at a stand-still on account of Holy Week, and no novelty stirring save "penitence" and that of a temporary nature.

On the 1st of April Capt. Greene and the Commissioners appointed by Gen. Concha, to inspect the Guano Keys, returned from their cruise. Their report is highly satisfactory.

General Concha was making great preparations to lodge the 10,000 men who were expected from Spain for the prosecution of the war against Mexico. News had been brought to Havana by the Spanish war steamer Colon, that the measures adopted by General Concha had been approved at home, and that 2,000 men were being embarked in Cadiz on board the ship-of-the-line Isabel Segunda, frigate Baiten, sloop Villa de Bilbao, brig Pelayo, and steamer Francisco de Asis.

The Diario de la Marina continues the discussion of the Tariff, and boldly advocates the reduction of fifty per cent. on all articles. From the supposition that the Diario only writes under official authority, its remarks on this question are entitled to considerable weight.

It is now generally acknowledged that the Cuba sugar crop this year will be shorter, by one fifth, than it was last year.

Our correspondent, writing from Havana on the 8th of April, says:

"Borrell, on the south side, is receiving cargoes of Africans constantly, and when he cannot bribe the local chief, he manages to buy up all his subordinates, and carries on his business with impunity. We have had an arrival on the north side, with 370 negroes, since last advice."

We are indebted to Mr. William Moran, Purser of the Empire City, for special favors.

The Administration have just acquiesced in the plan of the European Powers for the redemption of the Sound Dues.

A letter from Singapore has been received in this city, stating that, owing to the disturbances at Hong Kong and Canton, the disaffection among the Chinese against the English is rapidly spreading throughout the Celestial Empire. Singapore was, for the present, quiet, but there were apprehensions of an insurrection among the Chinese portion of the population, in consequence of the obnoxious police regulations of the British authorities, who, however, had made preparations to suppress any disorders which might arise. It was ascertained that the Chinese had been plotting secretly against the "devils," as they call the English.

MARINE MATTERS.

WRECK OF THE SHIP NOCOOCHEE.

Havana, Friday, April 3, 1857.

On the 30th inst., in the night, the ship Nocoochee, from New-Orleans, bound to Havana, struck on the reef, about fifty miles to the westward of the port. On the 1st inst., a steamer and fifty men were sent to assist in getting her off; anchors were taken out, and chains hove taught, the ballast taken out, and after every exertion to get her afloat was made without success, she was abandoned; sails and rigging brought to the city. The ship Harpswell is nearly loaded with balance of Cotton from ship Caspian.—By letter to Elwood Walter, Esq.

LAUNCHED AT LAST.

The Queen of the Pacific, which baulked in the launching, was successfully got off the ways on Saturday night at 11 o'clock. Her stern was lifted at high water by the aid of casks, spars, &c., and her bow was raised by means of jack screws, when, by the aid of horses, capstans, and men, at high water, she took a start, and redeemed her reputation by a very graceful slide into the East River. She has not been injured, perceptibly, by the accident. She was towed to the dock of the Morgan Iron Works, where she will receive her engine.

The ship Wild Wave, Knowles, of Boston, which arrived at this port on Friday, from Havre, with 314 passengers to Post, Smith & Co., lost three of her crew overboard on the passage. Alexande Jenkins, of Ireland, fell from the mizzen topsail yard overboard, on the 11th of March, and was lost. A week afterwards, on the 18th, during a gale from the westward, Daniel A. Cotrell, of Boston, the third officer, and J. Pendelly, a seaman, were both lost from off the topgallant forecastle, and were drowned. On the 12th of March, Capt. Knowles fell in with the Br. Brig Geelong, of Jersey, in a crippled condition from loss of spars, and having a signal of distress flying, they were in want of rigging and provisions, which Capt. K. was willing to supply, but the Captain of the Br. Brig refused either to heave to, or send his boat, and a gale soon coming on he left her.

A letter from Jones' Beach says: The ship New-Hampshire still lies head on, with 12 feet water in her hold. We have removed the sails and some small articles to one of the schooners, and have anchors and cables all ready to put down, but the sea is breaking too much about the ship, and we cannot board her. To-morrow morning, if weather permits, we shall get anchors down, and some cargo off to the schooner. The ship keeps her shape so far.

A passage from Honolulu in 98 days was performed by the whaling ship Eliza F. Mason, Captain Jernegan, which arrived at New-Bedford on Friday night last, the quickest yet made between the two ports by a whaler. The E. F. Mason is a beautiful clipper ship, built in Baltimore, and owned by Messrs. J. Howland, Jr. & Co.

A large fore and aft schooner, painted black, was seen ashore 15 miles north of Barnegat, on the 11th, by the bark Henry Trowbridge, which arrived on Saturday. The schooner had her sails set, and the crew were still on board, from which it was inferred she had not been long in that situation.

The British screw steamship Glasgow, from Glasgow, March 28, which arrived on Saturday, reports having spoken, one day out, the schooner Robina, which had lost one man overboard, and was short of provisions. The Glasgow supplied their wants.

The steamer Eagle's Wing has been refitted, and is expected to resume her trips for the season between New-Bedford and Edgartown to-day, leaving Edgartown at fifteen minutes before 7 A. M.

The brig Crawford, which was capsized off Red Hook last week, has been raised by Bishop's Derrick and put on to the flats below the Atlantic Dock. Her cargo is being discharged.

The fare to Boston via the Stonington route will, on and after Wednesday next, be reduced to $4.

Steamship Cahawba, Capt. Bullock, sailed today, at noon, for Havana and New-Orleans, with about 30 passengers, and $60,000 in specie for Havana.

The Broadway Tabernacle.

The Broadway Taberoacle Society have leased Miller's Assembly Rooms, and intend to worship there until their new church edifice is built. During the last week they have purchased ten lots on Sixth avenue and Thirty-fourth street for $78,000. Their building will occupy six of these lots, and will stand on the corner of Sixth-avenue and Thirty-fourth-street. A handsome church will be erected, to be called the "Tabernacle," in memory of the old church. The last Sunday of this month will close religious services in the existing Tabernacle, and preparations are making for interesting exercises on that day. Invitations have been sent to the former members of the choir, (which has always been a distinguished feature of the church,) to participate in the singing, and a general reunion of all who have been associated with the church is expected. Mr. John J. Phelps, who has purchased the building, will commence tearing it down on the 1st of May, so that it will not be used for the anniversaries. A store having Italian Opera.—The opening night of Paine's "down town" campaign was not propitious in a meteorological point of view, but there was a full attendance, much interest, and some excitement. Mr. Maretzek was well received on his entrance into the orchestra, and Messrs. Brignoli and Amodio came in for a few kindly rounds of remembrance. The "Traviata" is not an opera that any one can dwell on for any length of time with rapture,—although we think the music has been much underrated. The feature of the performance last night was the debut of Madame Gazzaniga as the heroine. The very favorable reports we have received of this lady's powers, were not, we must confess, confirmed by our experience. The decided approbation of a New-York audience Mme. Gazzaniga has yet to win. Last night she was laboring under a severe hoarseness, in consequence of which the commonest intervals were taken away; the simplest passages blurred. These defects were so obvious that we are sure they result in a large measure, if not wholly, from the local cause we have mentioned. Dramatically considered, Mme. Gazzaniga imparts more interest to the character of the heroine than her predecessor, Mme. de LaGrange. She is undoubtedly a fine actress, and, judging by the power and quality of her voice, will, when she has fully recovered its command, justify the eulogiums passed on her by the Philadelphia press.

EVIDENCE OF MISS AUGUSTA CUNNINGHAM.

Miss Augusta Cunningham was the next witness produced.

To questions put by the Surrogate she said: I am 18 years of age; I reside at No. 31 Bond-street; am the daughter of the claimant.

Q.—Did you reside at No. 31 Bond-street in October last? A.—I did.

Q.—Did Dr. Burdell, or your mother, at any time apply to you to witness a marriage ceremony between them? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Did you witness the solemnization of the marriage between them? A.—I do.

Q.—When? A.—On the 2?th of October last.

Q.—By whom was that ceremony performed? A.—Mr. Marvine.

Q.—Where? A.—No. 732 Greenwich-street; I think that is the number.

Q.—State in whose company the Doctor went to Mr. Marvine's on that night? A.—My mother and myself.

Q.—Did you three start in company? If so, from what place? A.—We did, from No. 31 Bond-street.

Q.—About what time of day or night was it? A.—It was between seven and eight.

Q.—That you started? A.—Yes.

Q.—Who first requested you to witness the marriage ceremony? A.—The Doctor.

Q.—What Doctor? A.—Dr. Burdell.

Q.—State whether you continued in company with your mother and till when, that night?

The Surrogate suggested that the questions should be put in chronological order, and proceeded himself to examine the witness to the main facts, as follows:

Q.—The Doctor was the first one who spoke to you on that subject? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Did he speak first to you on that evening about it? A.—No, Sir.

Q.—When did he speak to you about it for the first time? A.—It was on the Sunday morning next preceding the marriage he spoke first to me about it.

Q.—What did he say? A.—He asked me if I would be willing to be a witness to a marriage between my mother and himself.

Q.—What did you say? A.—He also stated that he wished me to keep it a secret—

Q.—State all that he said at that time. A.—Until June next; that he then intended going to Europe with mother, but nevertheless that he would take me with him, if I wished to go.

Q.—State all that he said at that time that you now recollect—was your mother present at the time? A.—She was.

Q.—What did she say, anything? A.—He asked her if I could keep a secret; she said he must ask that question of myself; he also stated to me that mother was going to Goshen to see if she could get Dimis Hubbard to come in to marry them; I asked the Doctor if it was to be at the house; he said it was to take place at the house; I then asked him why he wished it kept a secret; he said that he had promised Dimis Hubbard.

Q.—Who?

Mr. Clinton—Miss Hubbard she is called. She was married, but has been divorced.

Witness—He said he had promised he would never marry any one while she was single; that she was the only incumbrance he had on his hands at that time, and that she was to be married before June next; mother then told me I should not ask any more questions about it; I then left the room, leaving the two there together.

Q.—What was the next occasion when the subject was spoken of by Dr. Burdell? A.—I spoke to mother about it before we came down; she said—

Mr. Edwards objected.

Witness—I asked if she wanted to have it kept secret—

Surrogate—They object to anything she said unless the Doctor was present.

Witness—Nothing further was said about it down stairs.

Q.—When did you next hear the Doctor say anything on the subject? A.—Next morning the Doctor told me that mother had gone to Goshen, for that purpose, to Dr. Snodgrass'; he told me that in the office; no one was present but the Doctor and myself; I said nothing further to him, and that is all he said at that time on the subject.

Q.—When was it next adverted to in his presence? A.—I don't think he spoke about it again till Tuesday morning.

Q.—What did he say then? A.—He then asked mother what her age was.

Q.—Did she tell him? A.—She did.

Q.—What age did she give him? A.—She said thirty-five.

Q.—Where was this? A.—In his office.

Q.—Was any one else present, at that time, except you, your mother and the Doctor? A.—No, Sir.

Q.—State all else that was said at that time, when he asked your mother her age? A.—He had a paper with him, that Mrs. Snodgrass had given mother, with Mr. Marvine's address on it; he stated that he was going to the Bank, and that he would see Mr. Marvine before he returned; I don't remember anything particular that was said after that.

Q.—After Tuesday morning when next it was the subject referred to? A.—I did not see him then till 5 o'clock in the evening; I then saw him in the hall.

Q.—What passed? A.—He merely made the remark, saying, "I have accomplished it;" I don't remember the answer I gave him; he then passed on up stairs; it was at the foot of the stairs this conversation took place; I went down to tea.

Q.—Was your mother at tea? A.—She was; she was not down at that time; she came down afterwards.

Q.—Did the Doctor take tea with you? A.—No.

Q.—When did you first see him after tea? A.—After tea I went immediately up to his room.

Q.—Did you find him there? A.—Yes, Sir; he then told me to prepare myself to go.

Q.—To go where? A.—With him and mother, to Rev. Dr. Marvine's; I then left the room, for the purpose of doing so.

Q.—You went up stairs and dressed yourself? A.—Yes Sir.

Q.—Where did you next see the Doctor? A.—When I came down stairs I saw him in his office; mother was there waiting for me.

Q.—Where did you go, from the office? A.—We went down stairs.

Q.—All together? A.—Yes.

Q.—From the office where? A.—We were going to pass out; my mother met my sister Helen in the hall, and told her that she wished her to remember this night; I don't know what answer she made mother; we then passed out.

Q.—About what time was it when you left the house? A.—It was between seven and eight.

Q.—Did you walk directly from your house to Dr. Marvine's house? A.—No, Sir.

Q.—Where did you go after leaving the house? A.—After we got out a short distance mother said she had left her gloves; the Doctor said he had not any either; he said he would stop and buy them a pair; I think mother said to him, "We will step into our corset-maker's;" her name is Mrs. Sollenbach.

Q.—Whereabouts was that? A.—I don't know the number; it is in Broadway, opposite the Metropolitan; she made the remark as she passed in that she hoped the Doctor would not mistake the number of the house; he said he knew he could remember it, it being directly opposite the Metropolitan.

Q.—Did you all go in there together? A.—No, Sir; he left us at the door. my mother and myself, and we went in alone; he bought the gloves and brought them in after we had been in there half an hour.

Q.—Where was it your mother and you went to? A.—My mother and I remained in Mrs. Sollenbach's till he came for us.

Q.—And he bought the gloves elsewhere? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—After he came to you what next? A.—He came in and handed mother the gloves.

Q.—What color were they? A.—White.

Q.—Did he have a pair himself? A.—Yes.

Q.—What color were they? A.—White.

Q.—Well? A.—We then left the house.

Q.—Did your mother and the Doctor put on the gloves before leaving the house, or were they kept in a parcel? A.—I really don't remember.

Q.—Did you all then go directly from that place to Mr. Marvine's? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Who opened the door at Mr. Marvine's? A.—The servant girl.

Q.—What room did you go into? A.—The front parlor.

Q.—Who was there? A.—The girl came in after us, and made the gas brighter.

Q.—Was there nobody in the room when you went in? A.—No, Sir.

Q.—Who first came into the room after you went in? A.—Mr. Marvine.

Q.—Tell us all that happened there; if there was any conversation? A.—Mr. Marvine made the remark—"You see I am punctual;" he then took my name and age on a piece of paper; he asked that from myself; mother then said I was her daughter.

Q.—What next happened? A.—The Doctor introduced mother and myself to Mr. Marvine; I think that was after he took my name or before; I cannot say with certainty.

Q.—What was the next thing? A.—I think he then performed the ceremony.

Q.—Where did your mother and the Doctor stand when the ceremony was performed?

Mr. Clinton—Do you mean in regard to Mr. Marvine?

Witness—Yes.

Q.—Which side or end of the room did your mother and the Doctor stand in when the ceremony was performed? A.—The Doctor stood facing Mr. Marvine; my mother stood at his left; Mr. Marvine was in front.

Q.—Did the bridal couple stand by the fire-place, or at the folding-door, or in the middle of the room, or where? A.—Mother stood in front of the sofa, and the Doctor stood kind of round from her, not in a straight line with her; he stood a little in front of her.

Q.—The ceremony was then performed? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—What happened next immediately after the ceremony was performed? A.—Mr. Marvine made a short prayer; after that he made some remarks which I don't remember what they were; Mr. Marvine then asked the Doctor if he wished a certificate.

Q.—What did the Doctor say to that? A.—I think the Doctor said it would be better to have one. Mr. Marvine told him he would have it ready for him in the morning if he would call for it. The Doctor said he would. We then left the house.

Q.—Did you see or hear any domestics in the back-room at that time? A.—No, Sir.

Q.—Did you see or hear any signs of any person being in the back-room? A.—I thought there were some persons peeping through the folding doors, looking through.

Q.—Was there anything said at that time about keeping the marriage secret? A.—The Doctor said at the house before we left that he did not wish Mr. Marvine to publish it.

Q.—Did he mention the reason? A.—No. Sir.

Q.—What did Mr. Marvine say? A.—I don't remember what his answer was.

Q.—Was it the Doctor or your mother said that to Mr. Marvine? A.—The Doctor.

Q.—Not your mother? A.—No, Sir.

Q.—After you left the house where did you go? A.—We went immediately home.

Q.—All together? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—About what time did you arrive at home? A.—I think it was ten o'clock.

Q.—Did you walk up with them to their door? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—When you arrived home, how did you find the state of the weather? A.—We went up stairs to Dr. Doctor's room.

Q.—All of you? A.—Yes.

Q.—How long did you remain there? A.—I don't know.

Q.—Give it as near as you can recollect? A.—I should think it was between ten and fifteen minutes.

Q.—Did your mother and the Doctor remain there during that time? A.—They did.

Q.—Was anything said on the way from Mr. Marvine's that you recollect? A.—I made the remark to the Doctor that if I ever should tell it what he would say; he said he would kill me; I don't know whether he said it in earnest or in jest; mother asked him why he did not give Mr. Marvine the ring; he said he did not ask for it; he (the Doctor) said if he would put it on her finger and say a few words it would do just as well.

Q.—Is that all you recollect that was said on the way home? Did he do any thing at that time about the ring? Did he put a ring on her finger? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—In the street? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Where did he get the ring from? A.—I don't know whether he had it in his hand or on his finger; I don't know where he took it from.

Q.—Is there any thing else you recollect as having occurred on the way home? A.—Nothing particular.

Q.—After you went up stairs to the Doctor's office when you had arrived home, please state what took place there. A.—I don't remember what he said particular.

Q.—After you left the Doctor's office did you retire to bed? A.—I went into his back-room—his bedroom—with mother.

Q.—Did you go up stairs from the back room? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Where did you go—to your own room? A.—I went to my own room.

Q.—Whom did you find there? A.—My sister.

Q.—Was she up or in bed? A.—She was in bed.

Q.—Did you leave that room again that night? A.—No, Sir.

By Mr. Clinton—Who was the party that was married that night by Rev. Mr. Marvine to your mother? A.—Dr. Harvey Burdell.

Mr. Clinton—That is all we want.

CROSS-EXAMINATION BY MR. TILDEN.

Q.—How do you fix the day on which this marriage took place, Miss Cunningham? How do you know it was on the 26th of October? A.—I think it was something I ought to remember; this Doctor often talked to me about it.

Q.—Are you positive that was the first time? A.—Yes.

Q.—Was it on the Sunday morning before church time? A.—Yes, it was.

Q.—Was there any circumstance that occasioned you to say it was on Sunday morning? A.—He said he wanted my mother to go to Goshen on Monday; he told me on Monday that she had gone.

Q.—On what time on Monday did the Doctor tell you she had gone? A.—In the morning; I was in his office; I think he was fixing his instruments.

Q.—This was the day after he had first spoken to you about it, and the day before the marriage? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—And during your mother's absence to see Dr. Snodgrass at Goshen? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Do you remember any other conversation you had with him? A.—No; I was not long in conversation with him.

Q.—When did your mother return from Goshen? A.—In the evening.

Q.—Did she go to Goshen by way of Newburg? A.—I do not know.

Q.—Did she leave the house in a carriage or on foot? A.—I don't think she went in a carriage.

Q.—What time did she leave that morning to go? A.—I don't know: she had to take her breakfast alone, because she went so early.

Q.—Did the Doctor say how long he intended to be gone to Europe, after he had told you he should keep the marriage secret until June? A.—He did not.

Q.—Your mother was to go with him to Europe? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—What reason did he give for wishing to keep the marriage secret? A.—He said he had promised his cousin, Mr. Demise, that he would not get married till she was married.

Q.—Did he give no other reason? A.—I do not remember any.

Q.—What time on Tuesday morning was the conversation when he asked your mother her age? A.—I think it was between seven and eight, before breakfast.

Q.—It was in his office? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—How did you happen to be in his office before breakfast? A.—I generally went in.

Q.—How did your mother come to be there? A.—She generally went in too.

Q.—Had he a paper in his hand? A.—Yes; a written paper; it had Mr. Marvine's address on it.

Q.—What did he say to you that night? A.—He said he had accomplished it.

Q.—Accomplished what? A.—I suppose he meant the preparations for the marriage.

Q.—Did Dr. Burdell at that time take his meals in the house? A.—No, Sir.

Q.—About what time did he usually go out to dinner? A.—Between four and five.

Q.—About what time did the Doctor return to the house that evening? A.—About six o'clock.

Q.—It was then he told you to prepare yourself for the evening? A.—Not then; not till afterwards.

Q.—Did you go to tea first? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—How long were you at your tea? A.—About twenty minutes.

Q.—How was he dressed? A.—I do not remember.

Q.—Was there anything unusual in his appearance? A.—I do not remember if there was.

Q.—Had he on a frock coat or a dress coat? A.—I do not know the difference.

Q.—What was there about his dress that struck you? A.—I simply remarked that he looked rather dressy.

Q.—When did your mother tell you to remember that night? A.—She did not tell me; she told my sister; the Doctor was present; we were in the hall going out.

Q.—Can you state precisely what your mother said to your sister Helen on that occasion? A.—She only told her to remember it.

Q.—Did she give any reason for wishing her to remember it? A.—She did not.

Q.—Did you ever talk to your sister of the marriage previous to the murder of Dr. Burdell? A.—I never did.

Q.—Why not? A.—Because I promised Dr. Burdell I would tell nobody of it.

Q.—Did you have a carriage to go to Mr. Marvine's? A.—No; we walked all the way.

Q.—Did you make any call on the way? A.—Yes, Sir; we called in at Mrs. Sollenbach's, and the Doctor went out.

Q.—What did he go out for? A.—To buy some gloves for himself and mother.

Q.—Was there a piano in the room? A.—There was.

Q.—Did anybody play upon it? A.—Yes, Sir; Miss Sollenbach played upon it, and I played upon it.

Q.—What did the Doctor do when he came back with the gloves? A.—He gave one pair to my mother.

Q.—Were they wrapped in paper? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Did he say anything? A.—I think he said it was all right, and we could go along.

Q.—On leaving Mrs. Sollenbach's, you went to Mr. Marvine's? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—You found Mr. Marvine waiting for you? A.—Yes, he was waiting.

Q.—Did you walk back after the ceremony? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Had you the Doctor's arm? A.—Part of the time I had, and my mother had his arm.

Q.—Did you talk much, coming back? A.—Yes, Sir; it was then my mother asked why he did not give Mr. Marvine the ring.

Q.—What ring was that? A.—A ring he had given her in July; there was other conversation, but nothing about the marriage, except about the ring; I remarked to my mother when we got home how queer the Doctor acted about the ring.

Q.—Where did your mother sleep after the marriage? A.—She slept with Dr. Burdell in his chamber.

Q.—How did you know that? A.—I generally stopped at the room door to know if she had any word to send down stairs.

Q.—About what time did you and your sister usually retire to bed? A.—We had no particular time; sometimes at eleven—never much later.

Q.—Who slept in that room, if anybody? A.—Mother slept there a few nights before the marriage.

Q.—Never after the marriage? A.—No, Sir.

Q.—Were did you come from? A.—From Saratoga.

Q.—Where were you before you were at Saratoga? A.—At Cleveland.

Q.—And her's towards him? A.—She was very kind.

Q.—Did you notice any kissing in Mr. Marvine's hall? A.—No, Sir.

Q.—When did he go? A.—The latter end of the week of the marriage.

Q.—Did he not go the next day after the marriage, on Wednesday? A.—No, Sir.

Q.—Are you sure it was after Wednesday? A.—I really cannot say

Q.—When did your mother take the house? A.—First of May.

Q.—What servant-girl was then there? A.—I don't remember.

Q.—What were your mother's relations with Mr. Eckel—those of intimacy? A.—No, Sir

Q.—Did she go out with him? A.—Yes, Sir; she did—twice.

Q.—Alone? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—After the marriage? A.—Yes; but she told me to tell the Doctor about it.

Q.—What did he say? A.—He laughed.

Q.—Did she go with Mr. Eckel to Cristadoro's? A.—I do not know.

Q.—Were you at the party on the 14th of January? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Did you notice that Mr. Eckel had a new wig on? A.—I know he had a wig on; I do not know if it was new.

Q.—Did you testify before the Coroner that Mr. Eckel never went out with your mother? A.—I do not recollect what I did testify to.

Q.—Did you ever see the door leading from Mr. Eckel's room to your mother's sleeping room open? A.—I saw it broken open by my mother, after the murder

Q.—Did your sister see your mother break it open? A.—She did.

Q.—Where was the key to that door? A.—My mother said there was no key to it.

Q.—Did you state before the Coroner's Jury that that door was always kept closed after the marriage? A.—I don't know what I stated; but I know it was always closed.

Q.—How do you know that? A.—It was always closed when I went into the room.

The Court here adjourned until 10 o'clock this morning, when Miss Cunningham will be further cross-examined.

NEW-YORK CITY.

Coroner's Inquests.

A SAD STORY OF DESTITUTION AND DEATH.

Coroner PERRY held an inquest yesterday at the Sixteenth Ward Station-house, upon the body of SARAH PERL, an Irish woman, aged 40 years, who died at that place late the previous night. She was found, about 10 o'clock Saturday night, by a policeman in an open yard at No. 68 Seventh-avenue. A little girl, 8 years of age, and two younger children (boys) were lying beside her upon a pile of rags. When spoken to by the officer, she answered feintly, and being unable to walk, was conveyed with the children in a cart to the Station-house. The officer said her breath had a disagreeable smell, but he could not state positively whether she had been drinking. She was put in one of the most comfortable cells and kindly cared for; but she died during the night. The children said deceased was their mother—that they had eaten nothing for a long time and were very hungry. Their wants were attended to. At the inquest, the little girl, MARY ANN by name, was examined. She told a very sad tale most artlessly:

"That is my mother," she said, pointing to the corpse. "The night before last two men came into our house, and turned my father and mother, and me and my two little brothers out. We had no where to go. We then went to sleep in an entry. Nobody turned us away all night. In the morning father went away to look for another place. He was gone all day. We had nothing to eat, and was very hungry. Father came back at 6 o'clock and then went away again. Nobody would let us into their house, 'cause they said if they did the landlord would turn them out. The folks we hired the house of hired it of somebody else. So we went into the yard. Mother said she was very sick; she had been sick a long time before, and my little brothers cried. Mother lay down, and I put some rags on her to keep her warm, because she said her head ached so bad. When it got dark my two little brothers lay down, and I put some things over them, and I got some rags to put under them too, and then I sat up to watch. By and by a policeman came along, and then he went away and got another one, and they lifted her up and put her into a cart, and took us all here. Mother didn't want to leave the yard. She said to the policeman that she wanted to stay where she was."

Policemen LYNCH and APGAR testified to finding the woman and children in the yard, and to conveying her to the police station.

A woman named RUDNER being sworn said: "The deceased and her husband and children came to our house about two weeks ago, and me and my husband took them in, and gave them a room out of charity. They were very poor, and we had to turn them out, because if we didn't, we would be turned out ourselves. We rent the house. MRS. PERL was a drinking woman. I saw her having some liquor on Saturday. She asked me to drink some, but I didn't."

The verdict rendered by the Jury was: "Death from intemperance and exposure."

The deceased will be buried in Potter's Field, and the children sent to the Almshouse.

SINGULAR DEATH OF A CHILD.

An inquest was held yesterday by Coroner CONNERY, at No. 156 East Fifth-street, upon the body of BARBARA GOETTMAN, a child, aged three months, who was killed at that place by her nurse, CATHARINE SMITH, falling upon her, while in a fit of epilepsy. A verdict was rendered in accordance with the facts.

DIED OF HIS INJURIES.

The men THOS. SMITH, who was run over about 2 o'clock, on Sunday morning, by one of the Third-avenue Railroad cars, died yesterday at Bellevue Hospital. Deceased was a native of Ireland, and 50 years of age. He was subject to epileptic fits, and it is supposed that being taken with one he fell across the track. He was not observed by the driver of the car until the wheels were upon him. Coroner GAMBLE held an inquest on the body. Verdict: Death from fracture of the left leg, and other injuries, received by being accidentally run over by Car No. 17 of the Third-avenue Railroad, on the morning of the 12th of April, 1857.

FOUND IN THE WATER.

The body of an unknown man was found, yesterday, in the water foot of Pier No, 8, East River. Deceased was about 40 years of age, three feet, five inches high, of stout build, with large bushy, sandy-colored whiskers—had on a white linen shirt, black silk handkerchief, black cloth vest, green twilled pants, crab frock coat, shoes, and white stockings. Coroner CONNERY held an inquest on the body. There were no external marks of violence upon it. Verdict: "Death from some cause unknown to the Jury."

☞ REYNOLDS & Co., who took the contracts for cleaning most of the down-town streets, carted 30,088 loads of dirt last week, and still the streets are intolerably dirty. From the Seventeenth Ward they took out 2 637 loads, from the First Ward 2,279.

☞ Mr. DEMPSTER had a fair audience for so foul a night at the Tabernacle last evening. He sang as well as ever.

☞ Mild operation with successful effect are the peculiarity of BRANDRETH'S PILLS. Now that we may soon expect genial Spring, it is of great importance that a few doses be used by the wise. Our race are subject to a redundancy of vitiated bile at this season, and it is as dangerous as it is prevalent; but BRANDRETH'S PILLS afford an invaluable and efficient protection. By their occasional use, we prevent the collection of those impurities which, when in sufficient quantities, cause so much danger to the fine organs of the stomach and bowels. Sold at principal office, No. 48 Brandreth Building, Nos. 415 and 417 Broadway.

The return is less favorable in the Specie average than was anticipated by $300,000 or $400,000. On inquiry we find that the interior Gold exchanges have been running to a moderate extent against the City. To the Kentucky Banks $200.000 was sent some days ago, and about the same amount to Charleston. Philadelphia is debtor to New-York and Boston about even. The falling off in the average to-day is unimportant, as with the aid of the arrival of $1,229,000 from California, the Banks begin the new week with something like $13,000,000. The demand for export will be light. The correspondent of the ROTHSCHILDS, who has shipped nothing last week, will probably avail of the Asia, on Wednesday, to the extent of $300,000 or $400,000. The Discount line is moderately up again, though not out of proportion to the banking means in the way of Capital and Deposits, as compared with this time last season, since when $9,840,000 has been added to Capital accounts.

The week opens on a quiet Money Market. There was some movement in demand loans, incident to the California arrival and the payment of the drafts from that quarter. The supply is made comfortable to the Brokers. The Sub Treasury paid $38,000 in California drafts, and more are believed to have come in the mails, though not yet presented. The leading Bankers in Foreign Exchange realized 109 on London to-day, and at the close of Change hour talked of ⅛@¼ more on the closing business for the Asia, to-morrow. France are 5:22½@5:20. The mails by the Niagara from England advise the resumption of DODGE, BACON & Co., of London, in their general business, and the failure of GREENE & Co., of Paris. The latter formerly did a considerable business with the United States, but their engagements of late have been running off. The particulars of the new Panama negotiation referred to in several of the London circulars, have not been made public.

At the Stock Exchange this morning, a large business was done in railway shares and in some of the State Stocks, at a further improvement. The heaviest operations were in Erie, Reading, New-York Central and Missouri Sixes. In the afternoon, after most of the outside orders had been executed, the Bears availed of the result of the Bank statement to sell the market down about one per cent., and the general list closed somewhat heavy. The principal fluctuations of the day were:

Michigan Southern, from..... 72 to 70½ ₰ cent.
Reading, from..... 80⅝ to 79⅜ ₰ cent.
Illinois Central, from..... 132½ to 132 ₰ cent.

The deliveries of Illinois Central Stock are made by the short sellers with considerable difficulty, there being less than 4,000 shares of a capital of 170,000 shares at the commend of the Brokers. This afternoon a seller's contract, 60 days, was put ont 1 ₰ cent. below the cash price.

The California arrival to-day is a satisfactory one in all respects except definite action in the State Legislature on the public debt, which has not yet been taken. The exact form of legislation is uncertain. A Conestitutional Convention is spoken of, though the shortest method for recognizing the debt would be by popular vote on the simple question of affirming its binding force. The gold shipment of the 20th March, amounted to $1,645,000. New-York gets $1,229,288; London, $368,406. The mining news is good, and the market reports show increased activity. The tone of the San Francisco advices on business affairs is the most cheerful we have heard for several months. The Bulletin says of the material developments of the State:

"The prospects are that the present year will be one of the most prosperous in e material point of view that has yet been known. Present appearances indicate that the largest yield of gold and a most abundant harvest, and we believe that business in this city will, during the spring at least, be remunerative to those engaged in it. The amount of dust coming down from the mines during the past fortnight has been large, as indicated by the deposits at the Mint. The activity which we noticed as existing immediately at the close of the last fortnight has since continued, and the tenor of advices received from foreign markets within the interim has been such as to communicate an extraordinary stimulus to several descriptions of goods. For sugar and teas indeed there has been a degree of excitement manifested quite without a parallel for a long time back in this market; the tendency developed for speculation, however, has not been content with those two articles, and the movements of the fortnight have embraced a wide range of goode, resulting more or less in enhanced rates being established."

The Pennsylvania Central is a very large return. Most of the lines show an increase equal to an average of 25 ₰ cent. on last season. The exact earnings of the Erie and New-York Central lines are not yet made up. We understand the Mineral Point Road, in Wisconsin, opened for traffic on the 4th inst., the work being complete and fully equipped. This is an important auxiliary to the Illinois Central and Galena and Chicago traffic, connecting the mineral district of Wisconsin with the trade of the Lakes and the East at Warren on the Illinois Central. The new line is 32 miles in length.

Arrival of the Neapolitan Diplomatic Agent in Paris.

The Sound Dues Treaty Ratified by Prussia and Hamburg.

The Hamburg and North American Packet Company's iron screw steamer Borussia, Capt. TRAUTMAN, arrived yesterday, after a very quick passage of thirteen days, from Hamburg, having left that port on the 1st inst. She brings 18 passengers in the first cabin, 41 in the second, and 322 in the steerage—381 in all. Capt. ERKENS, the former captain, has gone to Grangemouth, Scotland, where two other steamers are building for the Company.

The Borussia, in lat. 44° 11', lon. 49° 28', passed ...ships Hamburg, and during the last four days of her passage experienced foggy weather.

The news received by this arrival is extremely scanty. We do not find in the Hamburg papers any intelligence from Great Britain, or the slightest intimation as to how those elections which were held on the 30th ult. had resulted.

FRANCE.

The Paris correspondent of the Hamburg News, writing on the 30th ult., says, in relation to the Neufchatel question:

"The day of the 5th session of the Neufchatel Conference, in which ...tions will still arrive at a peacable and universally satisfactory solution of the Neufchatel question, and therefore but little interest is taken in its proceedings. It is said that a principal difficulty in the arrangement is the money demand of Prussia. Dr. KERN wished to proceed to Bern to obtain new instructions, but the other plenipotentiary objected, as it would cause too long an interruption of the Conferences."

It seems to be certain that Prince NAPOLEON will meet the Grand Duke CONSTANTINE at Toulon.

Count MORNY's return to Paris is expected in May. The Duke of GRAMMONT and the Duke of MONTEBELLO are mentioned as most likely to succeed him in the mission to Russia.

The number of Russian nobles sojourning in France is increasing daily. Many, amongst them the Director-General of the Police of St. Petersburg, will depart next Monday for Toulon for the solemn reception of the Grand Duke CONSTANTINE.

At Lyons, numerous political arrests have taken place. It is said that the Police have discovered a secret society whose members are joined for the purpose of furthering the election of the well-known Republican and celebrated physician RASPAIL, who, however, is not eligible under the new election law.

The Paris Patrie says: "FERUCK KHAN is expected about this time back from London in Paris. Only four persons of the members of the legations have accompanied him on his journey. If he receives from the Court of Teheran a ratification of the treaty concluded between Persia and England, he will again go to London, and then be accompanied by all the attachés of the embassy. He will there conclude the negotiations which he has commenced with various powers in regard to commercial treaties, and leave for Persia in September."

The Paris Pays says that letters from Vienna announce that the Commander-in-Chief of the troops in Moldavia had officially announced, on the 25th of March, that on that day not a single Austrian soldier remained in Moldavia. The Pays adds that the country was very quietly preparing for the elections.

The Vienna correspondent of the Börsen Halle, says that Baron BOURQUENEY has handed count BUOL a note of the French Government, in which it is announced that notwithstanding the diplomatic rupture between Austria and Sardinia, the French Cabinet was resolved to continue with energy the already commenced attempt at mediation.

The Secretary of the Sardinian Legation in Vienna, has arrived in Paris, where also the Marquis DE GARMONO, the hitherto Sardinian Chargé d'Affaires in Vienna, is expected.

Paris letters announce the arrival of an agent of the Foreign Ministry of Naples as official Chargé d'Affaires.

SPAIN.

The elections for the Cortes began on the 25th of March; the prospects are favorable for a victory o the Government.

The Infant Don ENRIQUE, brother of the King, has been ordered to quit Spain, and to go to France, because he declared for the Progressists.

DENMARK.

COPENHAGEN, Monday, March 30.

To-day the French Ambassador at this Court has exchanged the ratifications of the Sound Dues Treaty, on the part of his Government.

On the 28th inst. a provisory decree on the Transit Dues was published by the Minister of Foreign Affairs.

The rumor is very prevalent in Paris that a new Imperial Nobility is to be instituted, and that the already announced law against the fraudulent assumption of titles is destined to prepare the way for it.

The number of departments which are to lose a delegate on account of decrease of population, is said to be eight; the Départments of Upper Saone and of Sarthe, are of the number.

The hackney coachmen of Paris have sent a deputation to the Emperor to request an increase of fares. Their application has been refused, but they are to be allowed to make a charge for baggage they carry.

GERMANY.

In the session of the Prussian House of Delegates on March 30th, the treaty for the abrogation of the Danish Sound dues was ratified, and the House of Nobles on the same day followed the action of the lower body.

The treaty has also been ratified by Hamburg.

The Prussian Prime Minister, Baron VON MANTEUFFEL, has announced to the House of Delegates that the negotiations between Austria and Prussia, in regard to the German-Danish question, were still in progress.

The Convention between Delegates of Austria and the Zollverein States has closed its sessions. The object of the Convention was to discuss the Austrian propositions for facilitating traffic between the States. Its sessions are to be resumed in Vienna.

Frankfort letters say that the rumor that Russia and France are resolved to take the part of Denmark against the German Bund, in the Schleswig-Holstein matter, find no belief in diplomatic circles there.

Commercial Intelligence.

From Washington.

EFFORTS TO CONCILIATE THE FLORIDA INDIANS—MOVEMENTS OF TROOPS, ETC.

WASHINGTON, Tuesday, April 14.

The Secretary of the Interior has given full instructions to Messrs. RECTOR and GARRELL, Indian Agents, who have left Washington for the scene of their duties to organize a delegation from the Creeks and Seminoles residing west of the Mississippi, to proceed to Florida in the Autumn, on the especial business of persuading BILLY BOWLEGS and his followers to emigrate. The Florida Seminoles, the Government is aware, are too proud to be forced to this step at the point of the bayonet, and hence the resort to peaceful measures, which will, it is confidently believed, accomplish that important measure. In view of the above-mentioned design, there will meanwhile be no active military movements in Florida.

There will be no troops stationed in Kansas, who have in any way been complicated in the former difficulties in that Territory. In addition to the large force detailed for accompanying the Commission to run the Southern Boundary line of Kansas, a Summer campaign to chastise the Cheyennes and Kiowaye is arranged, and several officers are now here receiving specific instructions to that end. None of these troops are intended for Utah, as has been conjectured.

The case of Lieut. GILLIS, furloughed, is before one of the Naval Courts of Inquiry, and that of Lieut. WM. CHANDLER, before the other.

Rapid and Reckless Legislation—Slaughter of Important Bills—The Adjournment, &c.

Correspondence of the New-York Daily Times.

ALBANY, Tuesday, April 14, 1857.

The rapidity of legislation here exceeds anything that the most reckless ever dreamed of. Bills are introduced, reported, read and passed through both Houses, in the most hurried manner, and with a determination that in some instances wins your admiration—though it may excite your alarm. Take for instance the bill to amend the charter of the Albany Bridge Company. It was a measure of vast importance, involving as it did the probable diminution of the navigable breadth of the Hudson to less than 280 feet. Yet this bill was reported in the Assembly, read and passed, and sent to the Senate for concurrence in less than one hour.

Such instances are of hourly occurrence in both Houses. It is impossible for the most active to tell what is doing—it is literally impossible to tell what is done. The laws that will be after the Legislature adjourns, will, I am afraid, in many instances, be anything but the propositions that were originally offered. The Statute Book of this year will be a volume, huge in its proportions, beyond anything that has preceded it.

Among the bills which were slaughtered yesterday was that providing for the appointment of Commissioners to select a site for the two new Lunatic Asylums. This is the third year that a similar measure has been defeated, and I presume it will be slaughtered for the next three years in succession, as it has been for the past three years. The war on localities always stirs up sufficient hostility to insure the defeat of every bill.

The bill to require the cities to provide glass ballot-boxes at an expense not exceeding $10 each, was also defeated—only 15 votes being given in the affirmative, to 63 against it. This was one of the most stupendous swindles that was attempted, and that it received no more votes than it did is probably due alike to the iniquity of the scheme and the character of the individual under whose auspices it was introduced and managed in the Assembly.

The charter for an Emigrant Aid Society has passed both Houses. It is now a law.

It is understood that the nominations for Port-Wardens, Harbor-Masters and Police-Commissioners went up to-day. The Senate Chamber is so full of cracks that it is not at all surprising if I make a better certain guess as to who are named for those various officers.

I think SIMEON DRAPER, JAMES W. NYE, and JACOB CHOLWELL, are named Police Commissioners for the City of New-York; JAMES BOWEN, for the County of Westchester, and J. S. T. STRANAHAN, for the County of Kings. Messrs. DRAPER, BOWEN and STRANAHAN are Old-Line Whigs—Mr. CHOLWELL, an ex-Know-Nothing, and Mr. NYE, a Radical Democrat.

For Port Wardens there are named, MINTHORNE TOMPKINS, WILLIAM KING, EDWARD SEAMAN, EDGAR MCMULLEN, JOHN BUTLER, JR., JOHN FRIEND, Captain TIBBETTS, Captain TINCKHAM, and Judge BRAMHALL.

The Harbor Masters are SPENCER BENEDICT, W. J. A. FULLER, J. S. STAGG, WILLIS PATTEN, JACOB V. DODGE, HART L. MURRAY, CHARLES G. MUNCH, A. SMITH, JOHN CASHOW and JAMES P. FAGAN.

These nominations were all referred to appropriate Committees, and will no doubt be acted on at the next Executive session.

I think the Legislature will adjourn on Friday. All the most important bills that are ever permitted to fail, are now through. The Trinity Church bill, reported this morning, may pass, if the session holds until Friday, but the chances now are that it will go over. LEO.

The Appointments of Police Commissioners, Port Wardens and Harbor Masters.

ALBANY, Tuesday, April 14.

Police Commissioners under the new Bill—SIMEON DRAPER, JAMES W. NYE and JACOB CHOLWELL, for New-York; JAMES BOWEN for Westchester; and J. S. T. STRANAHAN for Kings.

Among the harbor masters were the following JAMES J. STAGG, ARCHIBALD HALL, Capt. HOWARD TIBBETTS, WILLIS TAFFAN, SPENCER BENEDICT and W. J. A. FULLER.

Among the port wardens were the following: MINTHORNE TOMPKINS, JOSEPH TINKHAM, EDWARD B SEAMAN, WM. G. KING, JOHN FRIEND, CHAS. H BRAMHALL and EDGAR MCMULLEN BUTLER.

Much feeling is manifested, and much excitement prevails about the Capitol.

On motion of Mr. WAKEMAN, the House went into Committee of the Whole on the bill establishing bulkheads and pier-lines for the harbor of New-York.

A large lobby influence was also at work against the bill. Messrs. VARNUM, MANN, HANFORD, JOHN J. REILLY, KIVLIN, and others, opposed the bill, and Messrs. FOOT and LITTLEJOHN supported it.

After a warm debate the Committee of the Whole rose and reported progress.

Mr. WAKEMAN moved to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the further consideration of the bill, and to order it to a third reading.

Mr. JONES moved to amend by substituting the bill offered by Mr. JOHN J. REILLY, extending the Commission and forbidding further encroachment on the harbor until the final line is adopted. Motion lost by Ayes 25, Nays 53.

Mr. SLUYTER moved to substitute the bill reported by the minority of the Committee.

The Speaker ruled the motion out of order.

Mr. KIVLIN warmly opposed the ordering of the bill to a third reading, declaring it unworthy the majority to press these City bills as party measures.

Mr. WAKEMAN'S motion prevailed.

Mr. SHERMAN moved to reconsider the vote on the bill for the establishment of two Lunatic Asylums, and to lay that motion on the table. Adjourned.

The Honduras Railway.

NEW-YORK, Monday, April 13, 1857.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

SIR: In your very lucid résumé of facts connected with the various actual and proposed routes of Interoceanic Communication in the TIMES of last Saturday, I think there is a slight discrepancy between the figures of the writer and the figures of the engraver. According to the former the summit of the proposed Honduras Railway is 2,681 feet of altitude above the sea, while according to the latter it is 276,000 feet, or 55 miles of vertical height!! Perhaps the author of the article will inform the public what "careful engineer" has pronounced the proposed work impracticable? It is true we have had the naturally impartial opinion of the Chief Engineer of the Panama Railway to that effect, but as that well-informed authority gave his opinion on an imaginary line o his own, called the "Totten line," which is something like one hundred and fifty miles distant from the Honduras line, he can hardly be supposed to come within the category of "Careful Engineers."

On the other hand, every engineer who has passed over the actual Honduras line, or who knows anything whatever about it, not only asserts its practicability but eminent feasibility.

It is not a "Bar-room line," to be put through by "vehement te'egraph," but will be built, and that without delay, at least such is the belief of

Your obedient servant, G. HOLLAND.

NICARAGUA AFFAIRS.

PROCEEDINGS OF COL. LOCKRIDGE.

Letter from Gen. Hall, Commissary General of Walker's Army.

NEW-YORK, Tuesday, April 14, 1857.

SIR: Noticing in the New-York Herald of to-day a copy of an order ...gned S. A. LOCKRIDGE, Colonel Nicaragua Army, dismissing me from his command, I feel it my duty in self defence to make a statement in detail of my introduction, and the slight connection I had with him recently on the San Juan River, and trust you will allow me the use of your columns for the following statement:

At the expiration of my furlough, I left this City with a small detachment under Capt. J. E. FARNUM, for San Juan del Norte, for the purpose of reaching general head-quarters by the shortest route that offered. Arrived there I found it impossible at that time to reach Rivas by Panama, and therefore determined to essay the river. Immediately on our arrival the small steamer Rescue came alongside and the self styled Col. LOCKRIDGE boarded us. I was introduced as our men and stores were being transferred to her—and we immediately proceeded up the river to a point called Camp Titus, and landing there joined the forces under Gen. WHEAT, Col. TITUS, and Col. ANDERSON. Whilst there, at the solicitation of LOCKRIDGE, and for the better preservation of the stores, which were being wasted, I consented to take temporary charge of the Commissary Department, and, by the way, this was the only connection I had with the river command. A few days after the battle of Serapiqui was fought, Capt. FARNUM being in temporary command of the recruits, whilst I, in attending to the duties of my department, remained in camp, or upon the little steamer, in company with LOCKRIDGE, who, during the entire engagement, was not exposed to any manner of danger, Gen. WHEAT, Col. ANDERSON, and Col. TITUS having not only decided upon the manner of attack, but commanded, without the presence of Col. LOCKRIDGE, during the day. After the occupation of Serapiqui I was upon the boat when she had proceeded within a mile and a half of Castillo, for the purpose of landing the troops under Gen. WHEAT and Col. TITUS, that were to, and did, attack the place. During the engagement there, he, LOCKRIDGE, was not under fire, nor exposed, and when Gen. WHEAT returned, LOCKRIDGE sent a message to Col. TITUS, to the effect that he should hold his position for 24 hours, in which time he promised to return with reinforcements; he then proceeded to Seraplqui. Instead of returning as he promised, he went down to Greytown, and running the boat aground, failed to keep his engagement. The consequence of this failure is the loss of Castillo, for if he had returned with the reinforcement in 24 hours, instead of 56 hours, as he did, Col. TITUS would not have retired.

I have mentioned these two facts in this connection for the purpose of showing the man's incompetency and great regard for self when any fighting was going on. These are the causes that have led to want of discipline, and desertion, and all other evils that have delayed the opening of the San Juan River. It is my honest conviction that, had Gen. WHEAT, or any other competent man, had the command or position assumed by Col. LOCKRIDGE, long ere this a communication would have been effected with Gen. WALKER.

After these exploits of LOCKRIDGE, I took advantage of the boat leaving for Greytown to visit there again, that I might await the arrival of the steamer which was to bring us the reinforcements, without which, LOCKRIDGE informed me, no further operations could be carried forward. Capt. FARNUM and Maj. ELLIS (whom, with Col. MCDONALD, then in Greytown, and myself, were the only commissioned officers on the river) accompanied me. Arrived there and discovering that the Tennessee had not brought reinforcements nor provisions, we resolved to await the arrival of the Texas; and, out of courtesy alone, informed LOCKRIDGE of our intention. Not having right, or authority, he of course made no objections, and, in consequence, we remained—Greytown being more pleasant to officers without command than up the river would have proved. LOCKRIDGE left, and, to cap the climax of his overbearing, unmannerly conduct, he has absolutely appropriated to himself all the private property, in way of stores, &c., that had been committed to my care, and which were intended to keep us, if it were necessary, free from Government expense, during our stay in Greytown.

Then commenced a series of privations that were enough to disgust any one with a military life, by their simple recital; nor were they relieved till Col. KINNEY stepped forward, and by his own exertions and sacrifices made us comfortable. This, I presume, was the only return LOCKRIDGE could make to an officer, who had not only written his dispatches, which, from utter inability, he could not write himself, but had with a delicacy worthy of a better object, corrected his orders, and attended to the slightest details which an ignorant commander might be called upon to issue.

Self-respect alone, would have induced any gentleman to refuse service under such a man; but when to this be added his conduct towards his superiors as well as the fact of his incompetency and vulgarity, is it to be wondered at, that failing to make a connection with the Army at Rivas we should retire? or is it at all surprising that a man of his character should make such charges when the absence of these he defames insures his safety? I think not, and leave allegations so inconsistent with my well-known sacrifices, and untiring services in the cause, to be settled between my friends, the public, and the man LOCKRIDGE.

GEO. B. HALL, Commissary General, N. A.

Letter from Captain J. Egbert Farnum concerning Colonel Lockridge.

NEW-YORK, Tuesday, April 14, 1857.

SIR: It is an awkward thing for a soldier to sound his own praise, or to be forced into a position where he feels it not only necessary but imperative that he should defend himself from the assaults of one who, neither as a soldier nor in social life he can recognize, but one who, through the accident of association, has gained a notoriety that would seem to give him claims to an authoritative position. I allude to Colonel S. A. LOCKRIDGE of the San Juan River.

This man, this Colonel LOCKRIDGE, has seen fit to use that little "brief authority" which he has assumed, to assail me without the least shadow of a justification, without the first particle of a right, and at a time when he knows too well that distance alone shields him from the consequences of his dastardly baseness. I use strong language, but the provocation is stronger. I wish to make a refutation of the charges he brings against me, and at the same time permit my friends and the public, by a brief statement of facts concerning my complicity with Nicaraguan affairs, to judge between us.

I went to Nicaragua for the first time in January, 1856, and, after an arduous campaign, was stricken down with fever in the following June; so severe was my illness that Gen. C. C. HORNSBY, who then commanded the Occidental Department, insisted on my returning to the United States, giving me orders to report at head-quarters so soon as I recovered my health. In accordance with these orders I left New-York City on the 29th of January, per steamer Tennessee, and, it not being possible to reach the head-quarters of the army, I landed at San Juan del Norte, assuming, at the same time, as the only "Line" officer present, the temporary command of the "recruits" on board. At Punta Arenas I was met by S. A. LOCKRIDGE, emigration agent of the Republic of Nicaragua, who, having first arrived with a body of recruits from New-Orleans, had assumed command of the River San Juan. He not holding rank in the army, of course I could not report to him for duty, and so I informed him, at the same time requesting him to relieve me of the command I had assumed. He said that he was perfectly willing to comply with my request; but requested of me in return that, as a special favor, I would retain the command until after the battle of Serapiqui. I did so, and continued in the temporary charge of the Company, until after the reverse of our fortunes at Castillo. I then proceeded on the Rescue to ... by which vessel we expected to receive ... Sequeira, agreed which nothing ... done upon the river. The day of her arrival—she having failed us in our expectations—LOCKRIDGE informed Lieutenant-Colonel MCDONALD, Major ELLIS, Colonel C. B. HALL and myself (the only commissioned officers on the river), and, consequently, the only officers without command) that he was about proceeding up the river. I replied, as did the other gentlemen, that, as nothing could be done until the arrival of the Texas, and as I had no command, that for the purpose of preparing my letters for the United States I should remain at Greytown until that time. He acknowledged the position I had taken, and said it was "entirely immaterial." That evening we learned from Greytown to Punta Arenas, and found that LOCKRIDGE had gone, and that he had not only taken all the public stores with him, but had also taken the baggage and private stores, in fact every thing that he could lay his hands upon! The private stores, on which we had intended to mess during the balance of the boat, were just as much our individual property, as the fact of having purchased them with private purses could make them. Here, then, we found ourselves (in company with five or six officers of the Recruits, who, disgusted, had resigned, and whose resignations had been accepted,) without money, without food, without blankets, and, in fact, everything; no possible communication with our friends, and none but enemies, and poor ones at that, around us. In this dilemma, we were forced to apply ourselves and trust to the brackish water that washed into the lagoons along the beach, for its scanty supply of clams and crabs, for food sufficient to keep us from absolute starvation. This continued for several days, when Col. KINNEY, the last man on earth from an officer of Gen. WALKER'S army had a right to look to for aid of any kind, came forward and offered us his hospitality, which we accepted, and were rendered comfortable during the rest of our sojourn.

Had LOCKRIDGE done nothing more than this—abandoning, without cause, officers who had every claim upon him; or the army proper, no gentleman, who had the least respect for himself, could ever again cooperate with him; and, to this conclusion, we quickly arrived. Knowing his incompetency for any command, we, the commissioned officers, appointed a committee to wait upon any officer of the Nicaraguan Army who held a commission, for the purpose of offering to the eldest in date and rank, the command which LOCKRIDGE had assumed without authority. Col. DON CARLOS THOMAS, the former Secretary of the Treasury of Nicaragua, then present in Greytown, waited upon us with his commission of "Colonel Efective," (Colonel in the line,) dated Nov. 24, 1855, and consequently, he ranking all others present, we proffered him the command of the river. He accepted it, and we notified LOCKRIDGE, in writing, of our proceedings. He answered Col. THOMAS, that, with all due respect to his rank, he would not give up the command, as he was authorized by Gen. WALKER to retain it. Col. THOMAS asked to be shown his authority, but LOCKRIDGE maintaining his position, refused to show it, for the very good reason (not assigned by L.) that at that time, he did not possess any. In the meantime, we had enlisted several recruits, among them Col. KINNEY himself, who publicly declared his willingness to shoulder a musket under any other man than LOCKRIDGE. The Texas also arrived with 140 men, accompanied by General HORNSBY. To him I immediately reported for duty, as he had given me my furlough.

He expressed great pleasure at seeing me, and I recounted to him the "story of our wrongs." Expecting, as

THE BURDELL ESTATE.

In Mrs. Cunningham the Widow of Dr. Burdell?

Miss Augusta Cunningham Cross-Examined.

The last of the Testimony for the Claimant.

SURROGATE'S COURT—April 14.

Q.—What were Dr. Burdell's habits in coming into the parlor to sit with the family, after the time of the alleged marriage? A.—His very often came into the parlor to sit before he went out in the evening; he was out every evening.

Q.—Did he spend any of his evenings in your mother's family room—the third story front room? A.—No, Sir; mother would go into his room and generally spent the evenings there when he was at home.

Q.—He never spent his evenings in her room? A.—I think he was up there two evenings to stay a short time.

Q.—When were those evenings? A.—I cannot state the time.

Q.—About when? A.—I cannot say when.

Q.—Can't you state whether they were in November, December, or January? A.—No, Sir, I cannot.

Q.—How long did he stay there—a long or a short time? A.—A short time.

Q.—Two evenings, and but two evenings? A.—I think that is all.

Q.—When he came into the parlor to sit in the evening, did he sit alone or with the family? A.—With the family.

Q.—How often did he do that? A.—He done it several times; I cannot remember how many times.

Q.—Many times? A.—Not a great many.

Q.—More than once? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Do you remember that he did more then once? A.—Yes.

Q.—Did you testify before the Coroner that you hadn't known him to come into the parlor to sit with the family more than one evening? A.—I do not know what I testified before the Coroner; I can't remember.

Q.—Did the Doctor begin the year about the 1st of May last year by boarding with your mother? A.—Yes, Sir; he had his cousin Miss Hubbard that was Mrs. Voorst.

Q.—How long did the Doctor continue to do that? A.—I do not know how long he continued to do so, but it was my mother said she would not have her in her house any longer.

Q.—I am not speaking of her, but of the Doctor. A.—He went out just before she left.

Q.—Where did he board after that? A.—I do not know.

Q.—Out of the house? A.—No, Sir.

Q.—Never resumed his habit of boarding in the house? A.—No, Sir; he would frequently take his meals after that, but not as a boarder.

Q.—Did you attend any ball during the Winter past? A.—I did not attend any ball.

Q.—Anything of a similar character, which you perhaps don't call a ball? A.—Yes, Sir; I attended small companies.

Q.—More than once? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Did you attend one about the time of your sickness? A.—I did not.

Q.—From the first of May last until the time of the marriage, I think you stated your mother slept in the back room, third story? A.—I stated so yesterday.

Mr. Tilden—Yes A.—I don't remember what I stated yesterday; I don't think I could have stated so; she part of the time slept in the fourth story and part of the time there.

In answer to the question, repeated by the Surrogate, the witness further said that if she had so stated yesterday it was a mistake.

Q.—During that time your mother generally slept in the back room, third story? A.—She generally slept there.

Q.—When she did not sleep there where did she sleep during that period? A.—She slept up stairs with us.

Q.—Where was that? A.—In the fourth story, back room.

Q.—Then, during this period, she usually slept in the back room or up stairs with you? A.—Yes, Sir, until Mr. Eckel came.

Q.—After Mr. Eckel came where did she sleep? A.—In the Doctor's floor, in that little room.

Q.—How long did she sleep there? A.—I do not know whether it was a week or over a week.

Q.—Was it during the time Mr. Eckel occupied the back room? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—After that where did she sleep? A.—In the Doctor's bedroom.

Q.—She continued to sleep there till the last of December? A.—Yes, Sir, I think it was December.

Q.—After that she came up to the third-story large front room? A.—Third-story front room.

Q.—Did she sleep continuously there up to the time of the Doctor's death? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Did Mr Eckel spend much time in your mother's room during this period of time, subsequent to the marriage? A.—No, Sir, very little.

Q.—Did he frequently spend his evenings there? A.—Sometimes he would.

Q.—Often or seldom? A.—I do not think it was very often.

Q.—Did you state, in your examination before the Coroner, that he went to that room to attend to the birds? A.—I don't know that I did, but I know that was the reason he went to that room—for the purpose of attending to the birds.

Q.—Nothing else? A.—No, Sir.

Q.—The Coroner said he was a bird himself.

Mr. Fullerton—You say that was the reason why he went there? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Now that reason only? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—How often did that require him to go there? A.—Sometimes mother would attend to them, and sometimes he would.

Q.—Where were the birds generally kept—in his room or down stairs? A.—Some were in here and some in his room.

Q.—Principally in his? A.—No, principally in here; sometimes I would bring them into his room.

Q.—How many birds were there? A.—I don't know; there was a great many.

Q.—Can you at least how many in your mother's room? A.—There were 26 or 17 in her room.

Q.—Do you remember the whole number in both rooms? A.—I think nearly 30 birds he had.

Q.—Some of the Doctor's death were not these birds in your room? A.—No, Sir.

Q.—Those were they not there? A.—They were with them, some of them.

Q.—Had you much conversation on the subject of the marriage after it occurred? A.—Not a great deal.

Q.—Ever allude to it to him? A.—I did.

Q.—On several occasions? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—What did he speak of it to you? A.—He never spoke in regard to it, but he would ask me if I have another father.

Q.—Did you have any conversation with any one else? A.—I have often spoke to mother about it.

Q.—Did you state in your examination before the Coroner that the wedding took place after the minister returned from the evening meeting? A.—I don't remember.

Q.—Do you remember that you did not? A.—No, I do not remember.

Q.—Now, in reply to the question put to you, "How late" [illegible] that the minister came in about eight o'clock, and he had to go to a prayer meeting, and would come back in an hour or an hour and a half, or [illegible] from the meeting? A.—I don't think that the Doctor stated that; that was what he told when he came home—that at the time he told the minister he would go there it would be too early.

Mr. Tilden repeated the question, reading it from the report of the DAILY TIMES, as follows: "He came in there about eight o'clock, and said he had to go to a prayer meeting, and if we would come back in an hour or an hour and a half he would be in from the meeting."

Surrogate—Now what did you say about the Doctor?

A.—It was the Doctor that stated that.

Q.—Can you repeat what the Doctor said.

A.—Stated that he had called at the minister's.

Surrogate—When?

A.—The morning when he went down stairs; was that time he [illegible] appointed, that the minister said he had a prayer meeting to attend to—I think it was a prayer meeting—and that he then would be in at the time he told the Doctor—that he would be home between eight and nine o'clock.

Mr. Tilden—She says she didn't answer as I have read.

Surrogate—Yes, Sir; there were many things misrepresented in the papers that I didn't say.

Q.—Were you then asked "Well, did you come back in an hour and a half?" and did you answer that "we did?"

A.—I think it was about that time; it might have been before; I was in a state of excitement; I hardly know what I did say.

Q.—Were you then asked whether that would bring you to about half-past nine or ten o'clock, and did you answer, "Yes, Sir, somewhere about that time?" A.—I don't remember, what I did answer.

Q.—The reason why I want that question and answer is because it is very definite, and shows a calm, free action of the mind of both parties.

Mr. Dean—A calm state of the Coroner's mind?

Mr. Tilden—This was not the Coroner who examined me.

Q.—Did you see the marriage certificate at any time? A.—Saw it the next morning after the wedding.

Q.—Where is the next morning? A.—I think mother showed it to me in the front room up stairs, third story.

Q.—About what time of day did you see that? A.—In the morning or afternoon.

Q.—What do you mean by that? A.—It was 12 o'clock or after; somewhere about 12.

Q.—Where was the marriage certificate kept?

A.—In a trunk.

Q.—Have you ever seen it again before the Doctor's death? A.—I think I saw it once or twice before that first time?

Q.—When was that first time? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Where was it? A.—At the same room.

Q.—Who had it? A.—Mother.

Q.—What was she doing with it? A.—I do not know.

Q.—Have you at the Coroner's inquest? who was present? A.—Part of the time the Coroner, and part of the time the other person's name was; I think Mr. Smith.

Q.—Was the examination mainly? A.—I don't state at that time that the Doctor told you the reason why the marriage was to be kept secret? A.—I don't know whether I did or not.

Q.—Did you not state that one motive for it was, that people would talk of him if he told he was married? A.—I do not know whether I did state that or not, I know many people said so.

Q.—Do you mention that your mother told you so? A.—I don't know whether I did or not.

Q.—Did you state that the Doctor told you so? A.—I don't know whether I did or not.

Q.—In reply to the question "Did the Doctor say anything else?" did you say, "not about that," but that it was not to be told; Not about the reason—merely that he didn't desire to have the marriage made public? A.—I don't remember; I was in such a state of excitement at the time that I don't know what I said.

Q.—In order to save time, the following admission is made by the counsel for the claimant, and read by the counsel on the other side: "It is admitted by counsel for the claimant that evidence may be given by [illegible] before the Coroner, with the same effect as if the witness had been interrogated on the trial."

Q.—Did you say to the house, No. 31 Bond-street, in May last, did she have a lease of it?

Mr. Fullerton—I object that this is not proper in the examination of the Coroner, and therefore, contrary to the [illegible] that the [illegible] is not to be going over the testimony before the Coroner for the mere purpose of contradiction; the witness could be examined precisely as if no previous [illegible] had been taken place.

The Surrogate—I am inclined to [illegible] the question, and witness stated that she did not know what she said when the Coroner asked her; her mother said it was an agreement.

Q.—Have you ever seen the lease of your [illegible] tion of the house? A.—Yes, Sir, I have seen the agreement; mother always called it an agreement.

Q.—Were you present when the [illegible] made? A.—I think I was—no, Sir; I [illegible] with.

Q.—Did you ever read the lease, or agreement? A.—Yes, Sir; I do not remember at this time; I have read it more than once; I think more than twice; I do not exactly remember; it was before the Doctor's death; I do not know whether I read it afterwards or not; no, it was before; how long I cannot say; cannot state whether it was one month or two months; I think it was in mother's front room, third story, I read it; no one was present but mother; she asked me to read it; for what purpose I do not know; do not remember whether I read it aloud or to myself; think it was aloud; do not remember that I made any observations to mother upon the subject, or that she made any to me; think I gave it to her when I read it; am not certain; think she kept it in her desk; do not know where she kept it; the reason why I think so is, once in looking over the desk I saw it there; think she asked me to read it more than once; cannot state how many times; do not know whether it was three times; either once or twice; cannot say whether it was signed; never noticed it; don't know whether it had mother's name in it.

Q.—Did you observe whether it had the Doctor's name to it? A.—I knew some name was signed at the bottom; I never looked particularly.

Q.—Did you testify in the Surrogate's Office that you saw this lease a short time before Dr. Burdell's death? A.—I do not remember whether I did or not; do not remember that I testified as to the contents of the lease; or whether it had writing on the back or not; or where mother used to keep it.

Q.—Do you know anything about a difficulty between Dr Burdell and your mother? A.—I heard there was such a difficulty; I do not know anything about it; think I heard my sister tell me about it; do not remember the time, whether it was in July, August or September; there was no difficulty in the house on Saturday previous to the Doctor's death, forenoon; I came down to his room to see if mother was there, and he pushed me out the door; I came down there because I wanted to see if she was there; do not know any reason why I thought she might be there; suppose it was because she was frequently there; do not know that I had any other reason; when I came down and tried to open the door it was locked; the Doctor opened it; I went in far enough to see that mother was there; this was in the afternoon; do not remember whether it was before or after dinner; I think it was the Saturday before he was killed; when I went in the Doctor's room he pushed me out; I went in far enough to see my mother sitting by the Doctor's desk, near the door, against the wall; the door opened towards it; do not remember whether the desk was open or not; mother was sitting in the rocking chair, and the Doctor was standing up by the door; when the Doctor pushed me out, mother came out and asked me if I was hurt; I told her I was not; do not know whether mother seemed to think I was hurt or not.

Q.—Was there not some difficulty between your mother and the Doctor about Mrs. Williams? A.—There was; I do not exactly remember the time; it was about a letter Mr. Vail received about Mrs. Williams.

Q.—What was the difficulty on the Saturday before the Doctor's death about? A.—I do not know; I might suppose what it was about.

Surrogate.—If you know what it was about of your own knowledge, you can answer. A.—I do not know; it was a mere supposition of mine.

Q.—What did the Doctor say when he turned you out of the room? A.—He didn't say anything—merely pushed me out; do not remember whether he locked the door again; I went up stairs; my mother went back again into the Doctor's room; I made no observation when the Doctor pushed me; my mother made none to my recollection.

Q.—Did the Doctor send you up stairs to your mother at any time about this occurrence of Saturday, before or after it? A.—No, he did not.

Q.—Do you know your mother's handwriting? A.—I don't think I should if I should see it.

Q.—Do you know your own? A.—I think I would.

Q.—Do you know Dr. Burdell's? A.—I do.

Several papers were handed to the witness, and she was asked in regard to each one if the writing was her own; she replied that it was not; in answer to the question if it was her mother's, she replied she did not know; but she thought she recognized Dr. Burdell's handwriting in some of them.

Q.—Had you any conversation with your sister in regard to this difficulty on the Saturday preceding his death? A.—I do not remember that I had.

Cross-examination continued by Mr. Edwards—I was present when my mother first heard of the death of Dr. Burdell; we were in the third story front room; do not recollect the time of day; it was after breakfast; we usually breakfast between eight and nine—sometimes earlier; do not know whether she used any exclamation or observation; she made none that I remember of; I was in the habit of assisting my mother at some things; would often help arrange the Doctor's rooms; very seldom those of the other boarders; the Doctor's especially; was not directed by my mother to write letters for her; was never directed to sign her name; never have done so.

Q.—Where was your mother in the habit of going to church? A.—She generally spent her Sabbaths with the Doctor; the Doctor generally spent his Sabbaths in his room; mother was not in the habit of going to church very often; cannot state how long she had not been in the habit of not going to church; think I went to it within a year; was at home New-Year's Day and received visitors; my mother was with me; no one else; the Doctor was out that day; Rev. Mr. Snodgrass visited the house and slept there at the time Mrs. Snodgrass was visiting us; was present with my mother at the Tombs when Rev. Mr. Snodgrass visited her there; do not remember what she said when he first came in; think he spoke to her something in regard to the certificate; don't exactly remember; do not remember what he said in relation to it; remember nothing in particular about it; there was a lady present; do not know who she was; have seen her before, but at our house, at the time I was sick, a little time after this occurrence; she came into the third story front room; never saw her before that time; am certain of that; did not hear my mother mention her name; did not hear her introduce her to Mr. Marvine; Mr. Marvine, I think, was there before I came in to visit my mother; the lady was in there when I came in; did not notice particularly whether she seemed to know Mr. Marvine or mother; she conversed with both; cannot say which of them she first addressed; it was in the morning, I think, when I went to see my mother.

Q.—I understood you to say you never knew her name, and never heard it mentioned? A.—I think I once asked my sister Helen, and she told me, but I don't remember what it was; think the name of the matron or female keeper of that part of the prison is Mrs. Foster.

To Mr. Clinton—I really do not know what was my situation when the Doctor's death was announced.

Mr. Clinton—We will prove by others what it was. She swore it.

To Mr. Tilden—I do not know whose handwriting that signature is—(the signature to exhibit No. 5,)—it is not mine; I don't think it is mother's; I don't think it is my own; I cannot say.

Mr. Tilden—It is addressed on the outside to Christopher Hempstead, Flathush.

Witness—He is an uncle of mine; he lives at Flathush

EVIDENCE OF DANIEL D. SMITH.

Dr. Smith, who is a resident of the house No. 83 Bond-st., and is by profession a physician and surgeon, stated in reply to Mr. Clinton, that on the 30th of October last he saw Dr. Burdell at breakfast or dinner in the Lafarge House. Witness having had memory of numbers and dates, could not say positively whether it was at breakfast or dinner, but thought it was at breakfast. At first he failed to recognise the deceased; because if appears he had changed since witness had last seen him, which might have been about six months before. During that time Dr. Smith had been absent in Europe, and had just returned when he met Dr. Burdell at the Lafarge Hotel; he made the voyage home in the steamship City of Baltimore, which had arrived at Philadelphia on the previous night, (October 30,) and he was conveyed by boat from the ship to the wharf in time to return (as he believed) the five o'clock train to New-York; the change in Dr. Burdell's personal appearance consisted in his having a moustache and dark beard and whiskers, as if they had been dyed; when the witness was in the habit of meeting him previous to his departure for Europe the deceased had no moustache, and his beard and whiskers were of a grayish hue, or striated; subsequently to this recognition, and before they left the hotel, witness and Dr. Burdell entered into a conversation which related to the European tour of the former; the deceased was very communicative concerning it, and remarked that he thought some of going to Europe himself; witness asked him when, and he replied that he thought he should go in the June ensuing; witness asked why he did not go then, (at the time of the conversation,) and stated that it was a pleasant season of the year, and if he intended to visit Italy it would be comfortable in the South, and he would be in season to see the carnival at Rome and Venice; the Doctor assigned as his reason for not going at that time the pressure of business engagements; the witness then inquired of him if he intended to go alone, to which the Doctor said—no, that he should have ladies in his company, or that ladies should accompany him; having heard the deceased speak rather sneeringly of marriage in times past, witness jokingly said to him: "Doctor, are you going to be married?" the Doctor made no reply, but laughed in a significant way, which induced the witness to think that it might possibly be the fact that he was going to be married; he then turned and went away; they met several times after that; Dr. Burdell invited the witness to call and see him, as he said he wanted to make some further inquiries respecting Europe, but witness deferred the visit from time to time, and in fact did not go at all; the times during which he saw him again were along about the time of the Allen trial, which (one of the counsel said) commenced on the 10th of November, and was tried before Judge Nelson; the witness never saw the claimant here (Mrs. Cunningham) that once, and had no acquaintance with her before this transaction with which she was mixed up, and about which the community had been so much excited, occurred.

On his cross-examination the witness stated that, at the time he had the conversation with Dr. Burdell, in the Lafarge House, the Doctor did not tell him that he was married, nor did he tell him in any of their subsequent conversations; the witness himself never referred to the subject again. The only time the witness ever saw Mrs. Cunningham was one Saturday, some time ago, when in company with a lady, who was very anxious to see the City Prison and Mrs. Cunningham. He obtained admission to the Tombs, and, after being refused permission to see Mrs. Cunningham, sent up his card, and was eventually allowed to visit her in her cell.

EVIDENCE OF MR. BENTON.

Mr. Buckley T. Benton, a gentleman employed in the gold, pen and jewelry trade, whose residence is No. 11 st. Felix st. Brooklyn, and place of business in Gilsey building corner of Courtlandt st. and Broadway, was the last witness examined for the claimant. He testified that he had known Dr. Burdell for tix or seven months prior to the Dr.'s murder. He as well as the Doctor was a director of the Artisan's Bank in this city, and had been in that capacity since the organization of the concern. On the 28th day of October last, (the date of the marriage,) witness was at a meeting of the Board of Directors at which Dr. Burdell also was present. There was some discussion at the Board relative to matters concerning the Board, in which Dr. Burdell, he believed, took part. Judging from the fact that the Board generally began to sit at half-past nine in the morning, and retired about eleven, he was of opinion that on that day the Doctor left the Bank between eleven and twelve; the next time he met the Doctor was, he believed, when the Board convened on the next discount day, which was on the 31st; the discount days were Tuesday and Friday. On his cross examination, the witness gave as the reason for his recollecting those two days in particular, that Mr. Frazier, the Vice-President of the Bank, tendered his resignation on the 24th of October, which was accepted on the same day, and this discussion on the next discount day was in relation to that affair. Witness had looked at the minutes at the time one of the Coroner's Jurors (Mr. Schaus) went to the Bank for information; he accompanied Mr. Schaus to the Bank, and aided him as far as he was able; the minutes showed the names of the members who attended each meeting of the Board. Without reference to the minutes witness thought that, unless he had known the date of Mr. Frazier's resignation, he would not have been able to recollect the circumstance he had just detailed as to the attendance of Dr. Burdell on that particular date.

A few considerable [illegible] conversation between counsel as to the character of evidence that would properly constitute rebutting testimony for the claimant, the counsel for Mrs. Cunningham announced that here they would rest the case.

The opposing counsel having made of their witnesses in attendance, and the Tilden being called on to attend the funeral of a relative to-day, (Wednesday,) the case was adjourned till Thursday morning at 10 o'clock.

ACTION FOR NEGLECT TO KEEP A TALL LIST ON THE HOUSTON-STREET FERRY.

Ira Lauworthy vs. Gerrard Stuyvesant, Ruben Withers, et al.—This action is brought under section party ulcer the act of April 7, 1813, in relation to reducing several laws of the City of New-York into one law. The section provides that every ferry company shall cause a list of the rates or prices for carrying passengers, &c., together with the fines and penalties regulating ferries, to be printed on a large sheet of paper and kept in a conspicuous place in the ferry-house and imposes a fine of $3 for each which the company may neglect so to do, which goes to any person suing for the same.

The plaintiff brings this suit against the Houston-street Ferry, alleging that they have neglected to comply with the requirement from the 21st of November, 1853, until the 21st day of November, 1856—a period of ten hundred and ninety-five days. He, therefore, claims the three dollars a day, which amounts to the sum of $3,285. The defendants, demurred to the complaint as not constituting a cause of action, as will more fully appear in the following opinion. The case was argued at Special Term, and the following opinion rendered:

CLERKE, J.—Even if the act of 1813 applied to the present system of ferriage, I do not think this complaint could be sustained. This act requires the "ferry-masters and keepers of ferries" to post certain rates, &c.; but it does not appear sufficient, at least, to maintain a penal action, that the defendants are "ferry-masters or keepers" of the ferry in question. It is not enough to say that they control, controlled or used the ferry as lessees, owners or proprietors. It may be very easily conceived that they could have done this, and yet not in the capacity of ferry-masters or keepers; they might have established the ferry as lessees from the Corporation, and after providing boats and everything necessary to carry it on, they might have conducted the whole to others, who would in that case be the real keepers of the establishment. But I am of the opinion that the Act of 1813 applied to the ferry as it then existing. It was evidently intended for sailing boats and barges, and, every variety of small vessels, and which have been entirely superseded by the steam ferries—a method of transportation requiring different regulation, introducing a different rate of charges, and removing any apprehension of that kind of imposition against which the act of 1813 was intended to guard. This is, therefore, not a question whether this act was repealed by subsequent acts, and whether it was applied or was intended to apply to the present state of things. The act of 1814, which was enacted for the regulation of steam-ferries, provides a different rate of charging, refers expressly to the act of 1813 as if it were applicable to sail boats and barge ferries, and contains no provision requiring the ferry-master or keeper to post their rates. Judgment for the defendants, with costs

Ambrose V. Perkins vs. Jas. C. Willett, Sheriff, &c.—New trial denied; order to be settled.

The New-York Equitable Insurance Co. vs. John T. Ferguson and others.—Judgment of foreclosure and sale.

Before Hon. Justice Peabody.

Castree vs. Postley.—In this action judgment was obtained in the Marine Court on the 10th of November, 1846, and has been assigned to the plaintiff, who now brings this action upon it. The defendant answers, by the statute of limitations, that the suit was not brought within six years after the cause of action accrued.

The Judge says that the statute provides that all actions on judgments not in Courts of record, shall be brought within six years after the action accrues, and not after that time. The Marine Court is not a Court of record for the purposes of this question, and the cause of the action accrued on this judgment as soon as it was recovered.

The statute is in full force as to judgments of that Court. The provisions of the bode—and among others, that which provides generally as to Courts of the United States, or any of the States or Territories: that suits on judgments in them may be brought at any time within twenty years, do not apply to cases in which the cause of action has accrued prior to the date of the act, which is 1848. This cause of action accrued in 1846, prior to the enactment of the code, and more than six years before this suit was brought, and therefore it is barred by the statute.

NOTICE

Orders in causes decided at Special Term must be settled within three days thereafter. Judge CLERK will attend every morning at 9½ o'clock, (Saturdays excepted,) for that purpose.

BROOKLYN CITY COURT.

Before Hon. S. D. Oulver, City Judge.

Ezra J. Townsend by Wm. H. Berry, her next friend, vs. George S. Townsend.—This case was on trial last week and was submitted to the Jury last evening. The action is brought for a limited divorce, alimony, &c., upon the ground of cruel and inhuman treatment.

The following questions were handed to the Jury by the Court as they retired, the only points upon which they had to pass upon:

1. Has the defendant been guilty of cruel and inhuman treatment of the plaintiff within the time alleged in the complaint.

2. Has the defendant, within the time aforesaid, been guilty of such conduct towards the plaintiff as renders it unsafe or improper to cohabit with him?

3. Has the plaintiff been guilty of ill-conduct on her part, justifying the conduct of the defendant?

Just as the Court was about to adjourn Monday evening, the Jury were called in, when the Foreman said they had not agreed upon a verdict.

Mr. Spooner, of counsel for plaintiffs, said that it had been intimated that the difficulty was upon the second question, and as that was immaterial, he moved to strike it out.

Mr. Fenton, defendants' counsel, opposed the motion, but question No. 2 was taken, and the Jury again retired, with instructions to bring in a sealed verdict. This morning they were called into Court, answering the first question affirmatively, and the third (second) they were not agreed upon.

The jury were then discharged.

A motion for a new trial by Mr. Fenton was denied. For plaintiff, Spomer and Willard; for defendant, H. B. Fenton.

John B. Beret vs. F. B. Shyton and Patrick O'Donnell—Action brought to recover face of an accomodation promissory note, drawn by one defendant in favor of the other.

The answer is that the note has been paid and that it came into possession of plaintiff after maturity. Verdict for plaintiff $271 84.

For plaintiff, T. M. Van Cott; for defendant Stryker, Mr. Reynolds; for defendant P. Donnell, J. B. King.

Vincent Faben vs. John Morrison.—Suit is brought to recover pay under a contract. Defence, not performed according to agreement. Case still on.

For plaintiff, C. J. Jack; for defendant, A. Sanford.

KINGS COUNTY COURT OF SESSIONS—April 14.

Before Hon. Samuel D. Morris, County Judge, and Justices Emmons and Schoonmaker.

Andrew Feely, indicted for an attempt to commit a rape upon the person of Catharine Pfifer, on Flushing-avenue, 18th of February, was tried and found guilty of assault and battery.

Patrick Lynch, a boy, indicted for burglary, pleaded guilty to petit larceny, and sentence was suspended on condition that his parents should take him out of the State.

David Anderson—an idiotic boy, indicted for burglary, pleaded guilty to petit lorcery and sentence suspended.

James Mylett, indicted for attempt to commit a rape, was found guilty, and sentenced to three years imprisonment in the State Prison at Sing-Sing.

The Court then adjourned to the 18th.

Alleged Fraud.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

My attention has been called to an article in your paper of the 9th inst., under the above caption, wherein it was stated that I was charged with a fraud on champagne, the property of WILLIAM ROBINSON.

On the 26th day of January last I sold to WILLIAM ROBINSON 68 baskets of domestic champagne, and the same were delivered to his order in the condition I purchased them.

Mr. R. says that the baskets were only half filled. I cannot dispute his word, but I am positive that if there was any deficiency it existed without any knowledge whatever on my part, and being satisfied of the facts I paid in cash all deficiency, and before I was aware of any complaint. I had an interview since with Mr. R. and stated to him frankly the situation, and he expressed himself perfectly satisfied, and regretted that I had not made an application before, and expressed his willingness and desire to Justice Osborn that the matter should not proceed further.

The Justice stated that he had no authority to arrest the proceedings, and I waived an examination and gave bail for my appearance.

As you published the alleged charge I ask you, as a matter of justice, to publish this communication.

WILLIAM LAVERTY.

NEW-YORK, Monday, April 13, 1857.

News from Australia.

THE FLOWER TRADE—WAGES IN AUSTRALIA—SHORT PASSAGE FROM EUROPE—EXPORT DUTY ON GOLD—RESULTS OF THE NORTHERN EXPLORATION—INTERESTING AND IMPORTANT DISCOVERIES.

We have files of papers from Sidney up to the 19th of January. The Herald of that city states that large parcels of Flour were stored for higher prices, which there was but little prospect of their reaching. The total Australian harvest is estimated from 340,000 acres laid down in Wheat, at 6,120,000 bushels; which, reckoning 47 bushels to a ton of flour, will give, after deducting 525,000 bushels for seed, 119,042 tons.

Victoria	350,000	South Australia	90,000
New-South Wales	280,000	Tasmania	80,000
Total			800,000

Estimating eight bushels of wheat to each person, 6,400,000 bushels of Wheat, or 136,170 tons of Flour will be needed, leaving a margin for import of 17,198 tons. As Chili will have a considerable amount to export to Australia, after feeding herself and Peru, there will be but a small outlet for United States Flour in that direction.

South Australia exported in 1856, 20,000 tons of Flour and 60,000 bushels of Wheat, and New South Wales imported about as much. This year South Australia will have 30,000 to 40,000 tons more than she needs.

Flour in Adelaide, Jan. 16, "Town Brands," brought £18 to £18 5s.; County, £17 to £17 5s.; California, £14 10s.; Wheat, 7s. 6d. to 7s. 9d. In Melbourne, Jan. 15, £19 was asked for Adelaide Flour. In Hobart Town, Jan. 5, Flour sold at auction for £19 to £19 10s.—sale stopped.

In Sidney the pay of mechanics is about $2 50 per day, half the price paid in San Francisco. In the country, servants, housemaids and laundresses get £20 to £30 per year and board; farm laborers £30 to £45 per year and rations, consisting of eight or twelve pounds of flour per week, ten to fourteen pounds of beef, two pounds of sugar and a quarter pound of tea; cooks and coachmen in the city get from £40 to £60 per year; printers, in Sidney, get 83 cents per 1,000 ems; seamen's wages, for coasting, £5 per month; to England £5 10s.; India, China, Valparaiso and back, £4 to £4 10s.; steamer seamen, 6; trimmers, £9; firemen, £12.

The steamship Simla had arrived at Sidney from Southampton in 51 days, stopping once to coal, being the shortest passage ever made. The Oneida made the run in 53 days, having lost three days in stoppages. These boats consumed about 2,500 tons of coal each. The Great Eastern, building at London, can take coal enough on board, it is said, to last her out to Australia and back.

The export duty on gold is fixed at 2s. 6d. per ounce. The yield of gold continues good.

Mr. A. C. GREGORY, commander of the North Australian Exploring Expedition, had made his report to the Government. He says that extreme monotony characterizes the physical features of the whole country; traversed from the Victoria to the 140th meridian, the interior country appearing to consist of table land of sand-stone formation, averaging 900 feet above the sea level, along the edge of which small rivers take their rise and traverse the short space which intervenes between the table land and the ocean.

This table land appears to form the continuation of the interior desert, which exists to the south of the Victoria. The insignificant size of the water course crossed between the Victoria and the Albert Rivers is almost a proof that no country, available for the purposes of settlement, exists south of the line traversed, while the small quantity of available land seen to the north renders it improbable that any considerable tract of land suitable for settlement exists on the southwest shore of the Gulf of Carpentaria. On the western side of the Gulf is a fine tract of land, in which the Rope river rises.

The "Plaine of Promise," on the south side of the Gulf between the meridians 139 and 141, extend little beyond latitude 18° 10'. These plains seem to result from the gradual recession of the water of the Gulf; the grass is inferior, and water scarce in the dry season, whilst the surface is so low that in rainy weather it is soft and boggy. Passing from the western to the eastern waters, a vast change was experienced, and on the upper portions of the Burdekin River there exist fine patches of land, which render it one of the most important districts in the colony.

In reference to settlement, Mr. GREGORY divides the country into three districts, each with its distinct character, climate and geographical position, viz.: The N. W. coast, the Gulf of Carpentaria, and the eastern coast.

The first of these is well suited for stock—dry, hot and healthy; the second offers no inducement to settlers, and is subject to drouth; and on the third a good country for settlement exists along the Burdeken River, and in a few years it will probably be settled as far as latitude 18°. The climate is cooler and more humid than the two first-named districts.

The aborigines met with differ from those of Morton Bay and Western Australia only in language. They practiced circumcision, extracted their front teeth, and were treacherous.

THE MURDER OF HENRY L. DODGE, INDIAN AGENT.—Information has been received at the Department of the Interior, confirmatory of the painful rumors that have been circulated respecting the fate of HENRY L. DODGE, United States Agent for the Navajo Indians, in New-Mexico, who has been missing for sometime past, and who, it was supposed, had been captured and confined, or killed by the Indians in that Territory. Major KENDRICK, commanding at Fort Defiance, sent out a command to search for Mr. Dodge, dead or alive, and his corpse was discovered at a point about thirty miles South of the Zana, and towards the headwaters of the Gila River. Mr. DODGE being a great favorite among the Navajos, and devoted to their interests, renders this wicked and wanton act of infidelity and cruelty inexplicable. The writer states that the Indians "struck off the hand that fed them, and, Joel-like, smote the benefactor of their race." It is stated that, so soon as grass is sufficiently advanced to sustain horses, 1,000 troops will take the field against these Indians, and chastise them so that they will learn the miseries of retribution upon treachery and murder. The victim of this cruel act is the son of Hon. HENRY DODGE, the venerable and distinguished ex-senator from Wisconsin.—Washington Union.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

WILL BE PUBLISHED APRIL 15TH, SCANDAL!
BY MRS. J. T. RICHFORD,
WITHOUT EXCEPTION
THE MOST INTENSELY INTERESTING BOOK OF THE SEASON.
1 vol. 12mo., pp. 294. Price $1 25.

This work is not a mere repetition under a new form of old plots, characters and incidents—but one that possesses the distinguishing characteristic of originality in all these particulars. Its subject is as universal as the air we breathe, and the evils it vividly portrays will serve as guiding lights for tens of thousands who might otherwise be led into sorrowful relations with those about them. It exhibits in a broad, moonday light of God's truth the Rights of Humanity—the innate sentiment of virtue of every Soul—proves conclusively that trials, however severe, refine the spirit, and that

"Ever the Right comes uppermost,
And ever is justice done."

THE INDEPENDENT, NOBLE TONE
that pervades every chapter;
THE FREE, UNTRAMMELED EXPRESSION
of Thought that will distinguish it from the libraries of books now emanating from the American Press;
THE ENTRANCING PICTURES OF THE BEAUTIFUL,
and the
VIVID CONTRAST OF RIGHT AND WRONG,
will at once commend the book to the
HEARTS AND HOMES OF THE PEOPLE.
It needs but to be read to be admired, and whenever one reads it, a score will be sure to follow.
It is presented to the public resting solely on its own intrinsic merits, INDEPENDENT OF THE PRAISE OR CENSURE OF CRITICS—in full confidence that all who admire the spiritually true, and an effort to raise the fallen, will give to it a soul-welcome into the great field of Humanity.
Copies of the above sent by mail, (postage paid,) on receipt of the retail price.
